U. S. Tells France to Revise Debt Plan

Europe Americanized, Luxury Democratized, by the World War

By GUGLIELMO FERRERO.
The Foremost Historian of Europe.

Paris, April 26.—The World War narrowed the Atlantic, brought America and Europe closer to each other; but if it has slightly Europeanized America, it has to a far greater extent Americanized Europe!

The war, by taking millions of men from their work in Europe to fight in the trenches, at the same time demanded a very great effort on the part of industry and agriculture. It transformed into direct producers, either as workmen or employes, as in America, a large number of persons, both men and women, who before had been occupied in making life easy and pleasant for those who were working. When the war was over very few of those persons returned to their former occupations; on the contrary, their example had a great effect upon the younger generation.

The debts and ruin caused by the war, the increases of taxation and costs of living, the strails into which certain classes have fallen during the past ten years, and from which they would gladly extricate themselves; the ease which has been attained by other classes and which

COLONEL MITCHELL knows flying; his record as a flying officer excels that of any other man of rank in the United States Army.

Those that know nothing about flying and kicked him out of the Army rendered unintentionally a great service to the United States. For Mitchell today is telling the people, without interference from swivel-chair "higher ups," truths that the people should hear.

It is a pleasure to give an audience of a good many million a few extracts from Colonel Mitchell's recent talk in Pasadena, The Pacific Coast, facing Asia, and deeply interested in flying machine protection, welcomes Mitchell. Let the people consider these statements from a competent man:

"We are so far behind the times that we don't even know what an honest-to-goodness airplane looks like. Despite the fact that we have spent $500,000,000 in the United States since the World War, just playing around with aviation, our people have no adequate conception of what air power means.

"Competent officers are resigning from the air service of the Army and Navy, disgusted by their inability to get anywhere with a constructive programme. The United States today has not more than 450 first-class air pilots, despite the large number of well-trained men available here at the end of the war."

The fault is not with this country, which invented the flying machine, and not with American fliers, or American manufacturers, but with official indifference. Listen to this from Colonel Mitchell:

"Planes are being built today in the outskirts of Los Angeles capable of making a non-stop flight to Hawaii and back; of flying from this city to New York in twenty hours; or of making a non-stop flight from New York City to Peking, China. That is the answer as to what air power could do in this country were it not throttled by the Army and Navy."

Fortunately there is a little light in the darkness, for our great business men and great industrialists, unlike some of our imitation statesmen and

DEMANDS BOOST IN PAYMENT

Washington, April 26 (A.P.).—France must revise its new offer for settlement of its war debt to this country, the American Debt Commission decided today.

The decision was reached at the second meeting of the American commission to study the proposal put forward last week by French Ambassador Berenger. Secretary Mellon will confer with the ambassador before negotiations are resumed.

BALK AT $25,070,000.

Although France will be asked to modify its offer it was emphasized today by the American commission that the latest discussions have not been terminated.

One of the principal hitches is how much France shall pay at the outset. Mr. Berenger proposed initial payment of $25,000,000 annually, but the commission is understood to desire higher first payments.

HOPE FOR "TRADE."

Last conferences were to work out an agreement on a trading basis without formally submitting a counter-proposal pending submission by the French ambassador of a new offer.

The negotiations do not depend on the controversial safety clause which would relieve France of its debt responsibilities in the event of failure of Germany to meet its reparation payments.

The American debt commission has expressed itself firmly against this and Ambassador Berenger is not expected to insist on such a guarantee.

QUINCY MAN IS BEATEN UNCONSCIOUS, THROWN INTO CREEK TO DROWN

The body of Joseph Barry, formerly of Federal avenue, South Quincy, bearing marks that indicated murder, was found today in the shallow water of Town Brook where it flows across Water Street Playground in the centre of Quincy Adams.

Death was caused by blows on the head and face from a blunt instrument, according to the police, and after an examination Medical Examiner Jones said that Barry was probably alive less than two hours before his body was found.

Besides wounds on the face, the head was battered and crushed in from repeated blows. Blood stains on the stone-walled sides of the creek and telltale marks in the soft earth of the playground gave mute evidence of violence.

Two parallel lines as if made by the heels of shoes, and apparently indicating that a body was dragged halfway across the playground to the edge of the brook, led to within a few feet of the spot where the body was found.

The face of the victim was marked

OFFICER SHOOTS SELF WHILE HUNTING THUGS

One casualty marked the first night of the new police riot gun motor patrol ordered by Superintendent Crowley to guard against crime and also capture the slayers of Patrolman Frank J. Conneau, when Patrolman Louis E. Murray of the East Dedham street station shot himself in the foot while leaping from a police car to chase two suspects.

The second step in checking the crime wave was taken when Safety Commissioner of the State Department of Correction named an advisory council to thoroughly investigate the problem.

As a third step, the police conducted a minute search of all resorts in Roxbury for two "flappers" believed to be Alfred Deshon and Robert Sanborski masquerading in female attire to elude detection.

As a result of the shooting accident, Murray was operated on at City Hospital and one toe amputated.

In accordance with the new order issued by Superintendent Michael H.

Young Robinson went to No. 5 Linden street, where he packed, while the father and Jackson went to the Alpha Delta House. Douglas later joined them there for luncheon.

NEGRO CHURCH BURNED IN JERSEY RACE RIOTS

Carteret, N. J., April 26 (A.P.).—The church of the First Baptist negro congregation, from which negroes were driven by a white mob, was burned to the ground today.

Race riots were threatened when Robert Ducnett, a negro, was arrested, charged with the fatal stabbing of John Carroll, a white boxer.

Shortly after the Rev. George H. Reed, pastor, began the Sunday evening service in the negro church, bricks and stones were hurled through the windows. When the worshippers fled, several were struck by stones thrown by the pursuing whites.

Today the church was fired. Firemen from several towns joined in attempting to save it, but were hampered by lack of water.

RESCUE WOMAN FROM RIVER

Mrs. Carleton J. Enwright of No. 128 Chestnut street, Beacon Hill section, and wife of a Boston advertising man, is at Massachusetts General Hospital today after being rescued from the Charles River by an unidentified man. An unidentified hero told police that he saw the woman struggling in the river, leaped in and dragged her to shore. He then took Mrs. Enwright in a taxicab to the Massachusetts General Hospital, where she is reported to be resting comfortably.

The rescue occurred near the Union Boat House at the foot of Mount Vernon street.

Enwright said today that his wife underwent an operation recently and since that time has been in a nervous condition.

CLAIMS $175 FOR HORSES OFFERED MARCH 17

The difference between a medium weight saddle horse and a draft horse will be thrashed out at a meeting of the claims committee of the City Council at a hearing on a claim by F. Callahan & Company for $175 for horses provided for the chief marshal and staff of the Evacuation Day parade.

Chief Marshal Joseph F. Daly and staff refused to ride the 35 horses sent from the Callahan stables in Cambridge, declaring they were ordinary draft horses, and refuse to walk rather than "burlesque" the parade.

Filing his claim today with the City Council, Callahan declared the same horses led the Bunker Hill anniversary parade last June 17, the World War Memorial Park parade July 4, and many other lines of march. The horses, he said weighed 1050 to 1150 pounds each, where draft horses weigh 1400 to 1,50 pounds.

Because Daly and his staff refused to ride in the South Boston parade, the bill for the horses was not paid out of the $10,000 appropriation for the celebration.

KAMP, BRAVES HURLER, TO TAKE BRIDE TO BISONS

Ike Kamp, former Boston Braves' pitcher, recently released to Buffalo of the International League, is to be married tomorrow night to Miss Margaret Fallon, 23, a teacher in the John S. Philbrick grade school, Roslindale.

Kamp refused to go to Buffalo unless Miss Fallon married him and accompanied him on the trip, and so she eventually said "Yes," and the ceremony will be performed by Rev. Fr. Scully at St. Thomas' Church.

The bride will be attended by Miss Ruth Smith and Louis Kamp, brother of the bridegroom, will be best man.

The romance began during the school days of the couple in Roxbiditch Grammar School, and continued through high school and after when Miss Fallon became a teacher and Kamp made baseball history for Holy Cross.

A week ago Kamp informed Miss Fallon he had been released to the Buffalo club, but declared he would not go to that city unless she accompanied him as his wife.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Mary L. Fallon and the late Joseph Fallon of No. 81 Sedgewick street, Jamaica Plain.

COPS HUNT PALS OF VICTIM

The body was discovered by Miss Alice Morrison of No. 61 Parker street, Quincy, who crossed the brook on a footbridge while on her way to work. She notified the police and when the body was removed by orders of Medical Examiner Jones, policemen who knew Barry said it was his body.

Barry, known in the locality as "Silvers" Barry, was last seen, as far as the police have learned, by Mrs. Parker White of No. 71 Gilbert street, who from her window saw him cross the footbridge and start away from the brook about 6 o'clock Sunday evening.

Police learned that Barry was working on Cape Cod until about a week ago, when he returned to Quincy with considerable cash in his pocket. The money may have been the motive for the crime, they declared.

Another theory was that Barry was slain accidentally during a fight on the playground, which was a common rendezvous for men in the neighborhood.

BOTTLES FOUND.

Barry was 45 years old and unmarried. Police were unable at first to learn his exact address, but it was believed to have been somewhere in Federal avenue.

Thirty yards from the brook were found two bottles, one containing a small amount of ginger ale, the other empty, but smelling of alcohol. Lieutenants Avery and Doran and Sergeant Cunavan declared they believed the body was dragged 100 yards entirely across the playground, known as the Water street field.

Other marks in the soil caused police to believe that at times during the trip across the playground the victim put up a struggle, but was subdued by his captors.

HIS FRIENDS HUNTED.

Medical Examiner Jones ordered the body removed to Hall's undertaking rooms, No. 1435 Hancock street, where he began an autopsy.

According to Mrs. White, who saw Barry, he was under the influence of liquor and was staggering, but he got across the field and started up the street.

Each pledges neutrality in the event of an attack by a third party.

FIND AUTO CRASH VICTIM NEAR DEATH IN WOODS

Lancaster, April 26.—Rescued from the woods where he wandered two days, James B. Gates, forty-six, of Leominster, is at the Clinton Hospital, resting comfortably after a harrowing experience. Before entering the woods Gates was in an automobile accident and sustained concussion of the brain. A posse of citizens found him propped against a tree, exhausted and nearly starved.

PRISONER TRIES TO HANG HIMSELF IN CELL

James Mulkern, forty-two, of Washington street, South Bend, is recovering at the City Hospital today, following an attempt to hang himself in his cell in the South Boston police station. He was arrested in South Boston on a charge of drunkenness and locked up.

While making his rounds through the jail Patrolman John Sullivan discovered Mulkern's body dangling from a noose made of his necktie.

HOUSE ROBBED, SUSPECT IS CAUGHT AFTER CHASE

Louis Davine, thirty-nine, of Melbett street, was arrested today by Mattapan station police following a break at the apartment of Bessie Cohen, No. 39 Bicknell street, Mattapan.

Davine was captured in the rear of a nearby home after a chase by Patrolman John H. Stelzer. Two diamond rings were found in his possession.

MAN, 70, EXPIRES ON TRAIN BOUND FOR HUB

A man believed to have been Clarence E. Makar, seventy, of Pine street, Wollaston, became ill today as a train from Braintree neared South Station and died before the station was reached. The body was removed to South Mortuary. Medical Examiner Timothy Leary found an auto license and registration card on the body which gave the only identification.

HUMAN CHAIN RESCUES SOUTH BOSTON GIRL FROM SEWER AFTER EXPLOSION

Mary and James Downs of No. 112 Third street, South Boston, saw their neighbor and playmate, Mary Rudvilovics, plunge into the open manhole at Athens and B streets. And like all other kids of the neighborhood they are busy congratulating Mary on her escape.

Mary Rudvilovics, twelve, of No. 1 Lawrence court, who ran so fast to the explosion scene that she fell into the open catch basin.

Stella, left, and Mary Rudvilovics. Mary was right behind her sister when she fell into the basin. Several other children who were playing nearby narrowly escaped injury when the mystery explosion hurled the manhole cover high into the air.

Mary shows where she fell in. Paul Normandie of No. 428 Saratoga street, East Boston, lowered himself head-first into the basin while another man held his ankles and hauled Mary out from death in three feet of slime. The blast rocked houses nearby.

THUG SUSPECTS ARE ARRESTED

Capture under unusual circumstances, having been arrested while Watertown police sought thugs for a Cambridge holdup, three young men were to face court today on robbery and assault charges, in connection with the attack and robbery of Francis J. Patterson, of No. 15 Everett street, Allston, found unconscious in the roadway.

The trio includes Warren F. Crocker, 21, Ferry street, Malden, Andrew P. Fortier, 32, Clement street, Malden, and Michael J. DiCico, 23, Hinckley street, Somerville.

Patrolmen Stewart Savage and Edward Murphy of the Watertown force were receiving word of a Cambridge holdup at their call box in Arlington street, Watertown, when a taxicab approaching at such a rate of speed that the officers decided to make inquiries.

At the curbing, the patrolmen noticed that the three occupants in the rear seat talked somewhat with the identifications sent out in connection with the Cambridge holdup.

The driver was surprised that there were only three passengers in his cab as the last time he had counted them there were four.

From Fortier and Crocker the police learned that the three met a stranger in an Allston lunch room and went for a ride with him to Boston for liquor.

Crowley, providing for officers to travel in pairs in automobiles, armed with slug loaded shot guns, Murray and Patrolman Harold H. Richmond started out to cover a section of the South End.

SHOOTING ACCIDENTAL.

Every known haunt of suspects had been covered and one man locked up in the station when a report came that an automobile had been stripped of its parts near Albany street. Murray and Richmond started for the scene and, on the way, saw two men whom Murray started to capture.

As he reached for his gun, it slipped from his hand. In trying to recover the weapon his fingers came in contact with the trigger and the weight of the barrel dragged the muzzle down and pulled the trigger, sending a charge of shot into his foot. Shoe and foot were riddled with lead pellets and he lost much blood.

The chase for the suspects halted while Richmond hurried his brother officer to City Hospital.

FIND TOOTHAKER LOOT.

Special Officers Leary, Brabazon and O'Connell of Station 11 went to an abandoned house in the Dearborn square section of Roxbury today and recovered a quantity of loot stolen by the Toothaker gang.

It was contained in a suitcase and wooden trunk and consisted of silks, cameras, opera glasses, carpenters' tools, a radio set, radio parts and a small instrument resembling a wire-tapping machine.

It is said the police know of another cache which they expect to visit shortly.

AUTO THIEVES ARE BUSY.

Thugs broke into the delicatessen store of Katz & Bortman at No. 248A West Newton street, Back Bay, and smashed open the cash register shortly before daylight. Police later checked up with the owners to find out how much loot was obtained.

While the patrol was cruising about the city and other police were watching for suspicious-looking cars entering or leaving the city, automobile thieves stole ten cars in Boston between midnight and daybreak. In twenty-four hours, forty-four cars were taken in the city, and of these only fourteen were found abandoned later.

Dash for Bold Bandits---and Find Plumber

A squad of police armed with riot guns today surrounded a house on Bodwell street, Dorchester, acting on a tip that a man resembling one of the suspects in the slaying of Patrolman Frank J. Comeau had entered the building.

The officers rushed into the house, only to find a plumber peacefully at work repairing pipes.

The police had received a telephone message to the effect that a young man had entered a vacant house, and was believed to be either Albert Deshon or Samuel Sansbursky, indicted jointly with Stanley B. Toothaker.

N. E. RIVERS ON RAMPAGE DO BIG DAMAGE

Rising rivers swollen by melting snow and Spring rains threatened several sections of New England today.

The Connecticut River reached dangerous level today at Hartford when it rose to the 34-foot mark, four feet higher than the flood stage. Low-lying land near Concord, N. H., is flooded and several washouts occurred on roads near Pembroke, Newport and Nashua. Cooler weather checked a possible flood which threatened the business section of Montpelier, Vt.

Rivers and streams in Northern and Eastern New York were at flood stages today. At Troy the Hudson River registered 2.9 feet above the flood mark.

CONNECTICUT RAMPAGES.

The Connecticut River is still rising and lowlands on both sides are flooded for miles in the vicinity of Hartford. In the city, the river overflowed its banks and crept up State street hill. In East Hartford meadows are under water and some roads are impassable. Barring sudden warm weather, however, there will be no very great rise during the next twenty-four hours, experienced rivermen say.

Cool weather, which developed during the night, caused a drop of four feet in streams passing through Montpelier. No serious damage has been reported in central Vermont.

BLACK RIVER RISES.

Rivers in New Hampshire are at highest point of the Spring. Water going over the dams at Sewall's Falls and Cravin's Falls from six to seven feet above normal.

The Hudson at Glens Falls, N. Y., has fallen four feet from the level it attained yesterday after a rapid rise. Adirondacks streams are still at flood stage, but lower reservoirs prevailing in that section, have apparently checked the rise, and lower levels are expected within a few hours.

The Mohawk is receding, while the Black River rose to a point that compelled the closing of several industrial plants in Watertown, N. Y. Street car service was halted in that city when the water crippled the power plant.

LIFE OF PARTY IS FINED AS 'BRIBER'

Ogarth Olsen was "the life of the party" at a Central square, Cambridge, dance, but according to the police, made a big mistake in offering Patrolman Charles Donnellan a $10 bill if the officer refrained from arresting him for selling liquor.

A dozen trips into the gallery of the hall with different men each time, made Patrolman Donnellan suspicious of Olsen and the cop finally clutched him.

A bottle of liquor was found on Olsen and he is declared to have admitted he was selling drinks to the dancers.

In East Cambridge court today, Olsen, who is 22 and lives at No. 260 Metropolitan avenue, Roslindale, was fined $100 for the alleged liquor sales and for attempting to bribe the officer.

GIRL OF 3 WANDERS SIX MILES FROM HOME

Fitchburg, April 26.—Rhea LaBlanc, three, of Wanoosnac road here, caused a kidnaping scare when she wandered from home and walked a distance of six miles to North Leominster. She entered the home of a woman there, but refused or was unable to tell her name or address.

FLOODS THREATEN UPPER N. Y. STATE

Albany, N. Y., April 26 (A.P.).—With two upstate rivers at their highest levels in years, northern New York State today was threatened with damage resulting from a belated Spring freshet which has swept away bridges, sections of roadways and halted travel over trunk highways. The Saranac River at Plattsburgh touched its highest stage in 38 years and the Hudson River at Glens Falls washed out all previous high water marks since the record crest of 1913. A heavy blanket of snow in the Adirondacks, which should have melted earlier under Spring's advances, was seen by weather officials as the source of most of the trouble.

WETS PREPARE SENATE FIGHT

of the Anti-Saloon League of America, announced that the legislative committee of his organization had sent out an appeal for $50,000 to fight wets up for election to Congress this year.

Wheeler's statement was in reply to charges that the Anti-Saloon League was raising a $1,000,000 slush fund to defeat wet Senators and Representatives, made by the joint legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, Constitutional Liberty League and the Motion Picture League.

YEAR'S TRIAL URGED.

Representative F. H. La Guardia of New York suggested that prohibition be given a year's trial in which advocates of prohibition would be given all they desire in the way of enforcement, marshaling all their end of a year, prohibition would prove such a failure that the people would force a change, he said.

He favored letting Wheeler be enforcement czar to satisfy the dry's for a year.

Modificationists in the Senate are only hoping for a beer bill from the judiciary committee, but they are reasonably sure that bills designed to strengthen the bone dry policy will be reported. The subcommittee which took testimony on prohibition is overwhelmingly dry, and the whole judiciary committee registers likewise.

ENFORCEMENT BILL.

Several bills pending before the subcommittee and having the backing of General Lincoln C. Andrews, federal prohibition czar, are expected to reach the Senate floor. One of these is for establishment of a separate bureau within the treasury to enforce prohibition.

It is upon this bill that an amendment is expected to prevent interference with the production and sale of beer for beverage use.

The House rules committee has voted to permit consideration of such a measure in that body at this session. Representative Tinkham (R) of Massachusetts said Universal Service that a test vote on modification, to place members on record before their constituents, will undoubtedly be sought in the House.

Caught in Broker's House, He Forgets Modern Theories He Preached

Chicago, April 26 (A.P.).—The up-to-date robber remains self-possessed when captured and cooly talks his way to freedom, Vincent DePascal wrote in an article found in his pocket, but when he was caught robbing the home of an Evanston broker DePascal became hysterical and when the police arrived broke down and sobbed.

De Pascal, who gained some publicity a year ago while in the Elmire State Reformatory in New York when an essay won for him first prize in a contest, was captured last night in the home of George B. Williams, who found him hiding in a bathroom.

ESSAY WON PRIZE.

In De Pascal's hotel room police found $28,000 in bonds which the prisoner admitted were stolen in one of several Evanston robberies.

De Pascal's prize winning essay obtained a shortening of his sentence for burglary at Elmira.

Many manuscripts were found among De Pascal's effects and also a large quantity of jewelry from which stones had been removed.

De Pascal's young wife, whom he married in St. Louis, is in a Chicago hospital suffering from appendicitis. He said he was trying to rob the Williams home to obtain money to defray her hospital expenses.

DECRIED OLD-TIMERS.

In the article on crime, called "Thugs of Yesterday and Today," De Pascal wrote that old methods of robbery now were out of date. Instead of the bludgeon and cap and mask, he related that the modern robber is a suave, well-dressed, level-headed man who never loses his self-possession irrespective of what close quarters he may find himself in.

"Keep cool" was the chief element he urged for the super-criminal, which he said he essayed to be.

COLLEGE IN ABSOLUTE CONTROL, IT SAYS

Institution Is Firfst Big One in East to Put Ban on Festive Cigarette

South Hadley, April 26 (A.P.)—All students of Mt. Holyoke College, with the beginning of the academic year next September, will be considered as having given their word of honor not to smoke while under college jurisdiction, according to a new rule just promulgated and signed by President Mary E. Woolley and Dean Florence Purington.

This rule reads as follows:

"Mt. Holyoke College disapproves of smoking by college students and has made the regulation that no student may smoke while under its jurisdiction.

"Every student entering or re-entering college will be considered as having given her word of honor that she will keep this regulation. A student failing to do this will be asked to withdraw from college."

A foot note explains that a student is "under the jurisdiction of the college" from the time she takes possession of her room in September until the college closes in June with the exception of the Christmas and Easter vacations and at all times when at her own home; overnight absence or absences for a longer time when not under the care of a college chaperone; during the day when visiting at the home of a friend out of town or when in company of her parents out of town.

Mt. Holyoke is virtually the only large woman's college in the East where smoking is entirely forbidden. At Smith smoking is now allowed in the rooms of all dormitories in which a majority of the girls vote for it and an affirmative vote has been taken in virtually every house.

MEASURES PACE LIGHT SETS; EINSTEIN O. K.

Chicago, April 26 (A.P.).—Prof. A. A. Michelson, University of Chicago physicist, will spend this Summer at the Mount Wilson Observatory, Pasadena, Cal., to continue his measurement of the velocity of light. His recent experiments here have substantiated parts of the Einstein theory.

He will seek to bring the measurements of light's speed to a greater degree of precision than ever reached.

CONRY SCORES 'EXTRAVAGANT' COURT PLANS

The plan recommended by the Machery commission for a new $6,500,000 courthouse on land bounded by Ashburton place, Court, Bulfinch and Somerset streets was denounced today by former Congressman Joseph A. Conry and ex-Assistant District Attorney Thomas D. Lavelle as an "extravagance."

Both speakers advocated a new criminal courts building in the vicinity of Castle square and "another simple office building" to house the registry of deeds and the probate court with their affiliations in the neighborhood of Columbus avenue and Clarendon street, "at a saving of about $4,000,000."

Conry attacked a provision in the bill which provides for the appointment of a building commission. He characterized the commission idea as "antiquated and objectionable."

"When this board, appointed by the united effort of the State, court and city, meets," he said, 'it will not be trusted to make any contracts without the approval of the Governor, Mayor and the chief justice of the Supreme Judicial Court. What an ambiguous honor for our chief justice. He must abandon his rank to become an inspector of buildings.

"If ever this contract came before the Supreme Court the chief justice, as an interested party, would be barred from hearing the case."

The proposal to saddle the entire expense of the building program on Boston, with the Governor and council fixing the salaries of the commission, appeared to Conry as an invasion of local rights.

The speaker protested against taking two acres of land in the heart of the city, with a tax value of $1,250,000 and paying an annual income of $40,000 to the city, for a building that would make "Mechanics Building look like a portable primary schoolhouse."

No details, he pointed out, are given as to the cost of the buildings in each case, and the public, he said, is left in the dark as to the kind of buildings planned.

SONGBIRD'S 3D MATE FORGETS WHERE HE WED!

New York, April 26.—Mindret Lord, new husband of Mme. Marguerite Namara, famous prima donna, can't remember where he and his songbird bride were married, but he remembered they were too busy to announce it.

Lord and the singer's former husband, Guy Bolton, from whom she was divorced shortly before the recent marriage, have been engaged since the wedding on a scenario, and the newlyweds are occupying an apartment sub-let from Bolton.

"We were too busy to announce it," said Lord, who is a Chicago newspaper man.

"We are so happy—Guy is a very good friend of ours and Mindret is working with him on a scenario," said Mme. Namara.

Lord is the songbird's third husband, her first having been Frederick Toye, Boston newspaperman, by whom she had a son, Frederick, Jr., fourteen. The Boltons had a daughter, now nine years old.

Mme. Namara was a member of the old Boston Opera Company, having been engaged by Henry Russell who heard her sing in Europe.

Her latest romance is dividing interest among theatrical folk today with the reunion of Joseph Schildkraut, famed as the "perfect stage lover," and his wife, Elise Bartlett, the actress.

Mrs. Schildkraut announced that she and her husband have made up their differences and will live together again, beginning next October. Up to that time they both have widely separated interests to attend to.

EUROPE LOSING TRADITION OF LUXURIOUS LIVING

they wish to maintain, have rapidly brought about a condition in all European countries similar to that which a European like myself could observe in America during my visit in 1910.

Democratizing Luxury

We have become Americanized without knowing it. The domestic servant question, for instance, which formerly was so easy, becomes, as in America, an increasingly difficult problem for all the middle classes. As in America, women are masculinizing themselves, and invading all fields of endeavor, they wish to work, to earn money and to live independently. As in America, big towns are developing rapidly, and life in them is becoming more agitated, inconvenient, expensive, difficult, turbulent and unstable.

As in America, luxury has been democratized while the lower classes are becoming accustomed to live better. External differences between the people and the bourgeoisie are vanishing. The great European luxury legacy of the aristocratic regimes of former days is in course of disappearing together with the royal courts, the old established fortunes and the refined industries.

Despite the often naif waste of the Nouveau riches, the tradition of luxury is gradually being lost and a relative simplicity is becoming obligatory even for the rich, as in America. As in America, also the magic combinations of mechanical science which seem almost supernatural; mass production in gigantic factories and the collective forms of production, distribution and consumption, triumph over the old variety of European life, and level it to an increasing uniformity.

War Awoke Italy

"This is progress," say the optimists. It is almost an official doctrine today in Italy that the country was asleep fifteen years ago. The war, happily awoke it, and it began really to live a few years ago. The same state of mind may be found more or less accentuated in almost all European countries.

The Americanization of Europe, however, seems to be a rather more complicated matter than is supposed by this too easy optimism, according to which, all is well, if production increases.

Europe is not America. For a century past, since the development of railways, the hard-working, energetic race in the United States has found itself in a unique position. It possessed immense fertile territories, with mines and forests in fabulous quantities, with instruments of increasing power for their development, and a political organization at once simple and solid. From generation to generation, as the instruments grew more perfect, population increased and capital accumulated, the exploitation of the country gave her ever increasing results, which surprised even the most optimistic Americans.

After 1880, European emigration gave to that already privileged country workers whose education had been made at the expense of their countries of origin—almost a million annually in the years which preceded the World War. It was as if a million men had been born every year in the United States, already grown up and capable of producing.

Add to this that Americans live, work and make plans for the future with no fear of war before their eyes. Often I said to my friends, when I was traveling in the United States, before the great cataclysm:

"You know theoretically that wars may break out; but you do not know what it means to live under the perpetual menace of war, not knowing when it will break out, how it will despoil, or what the consequences of it will be, but knowing it may change the life and very existence of everyone. That is the tragedy of Europe."

"Tragedy of Europe"

Nor are Americans particularly or anxiously preoccupied over eventual dangers of a revolution. They know that revolutions break out from time to time in all parts of the globe, just as those who live far from volcanoes and the sea coast know that from time to time there are eruptions and earthquakes. Exempt from blood tribute, very well paid, and accustomed to a large life, the popular classes in America are more conservative and have a greater respect for law than in Europe. They have hardly been touched by the strange messianic illusion of a regenerative revolution, by which the masses in Europe are more and more penetrated.

These favorable conditions have produced American optimism. Simple and simplifying, that optimism sometimes irritates Europeans, who know that not all the branches of the human family have received from God 4,000,000 square miles of fabulously rich country to exploit. But this optimism, with the abundance of which it is the offspring, is an element of stability, the importance of which it would be impossible to exaggerate. It is a powerful antidote to the ferment of discord and disintegration which is so active in all rich and cultivated civilizations.

The Americanization of Europe of which we are witnessing cannot therefore be useful to Europe, unless a solid basis of international peace and internal order is found, and it cannot continue indefinitely. It must cease at the point beyond which, instead of helping us to reconstitute our fortunes, it would throw us into social chaos.

There is much talk about the reconstruction of Europe. Let us never forget that such reconstruction can never be carried out on entirely new lines and that, in part, a reconstruction must be a restoration. Europe cannot become a copy of America, for certain elements of her old civilization are bound up with her very existence. The day which saw their destruction, Europe would cease to exist.

HERO PENSION BILL PASSING UP TO THEM

HERO PENSION SUCCESS SEEN

Two State Representatives from Cambridge, but of opposing parties —Harold M. Bradbury, Republican, and George C. McMennimen, Democrat—joined today in hearty endorsement of the Casey-Thomas-Boston Evening American hero pension bill for police and firemen sacrificed in line of duty.

Not only did the legislators of opposite political views join their sentiments, but they pledged their support to the measure in the General Assembly.

"I will certainly favor any action where the widows and children of men killed in the public service can receive proper remuneration," commented Representative Bradbury.

"The bill sponsored by the Boston Evening American, et al, is a good bill and should be favored by every public official on Beacon Hill.

ALWAYS FOR PENSIONS.

"I have consistently fought for pension bills and I am in favor of a bill which would be wider in scope even than that of the Boston Evening American. Every public servant should be given to understand that the city or town for which he works will care for his family if he is killed while serving the public.

"Pass the bill sponsored by the Evening American and, if possible, also pass a bill covering public servants of every city and town in Massachusetts. That is my hope and that is what I will fight for as long as I am sent to the State House to represent my district in Cambridge."

Representative McMennimen said:

"There can be no question as to the merits of the bill sponsored by the Boston Evening American, in which provision is made for remunerating widows and children of public servants killed in line of duty.

PREDICTS SUCCESS.

"With men losing their lives almost daily in protecting the lives and property of citizens throughout the State, no person elected to serve the public at the State House can possibly find an excuse to fail to vote for this worthy bill.

"Protection should be afforded the families of our public servants. I believe that every man representing Cambridge on Beacon Hill will agree with me on this matter. I have every belief that the bill will be passed by both branches of the government without serious opposition.

"When consideration is given the fact that police and firemen are not covered by industrial accident insurance as are employes of all private concerns the men whose duty it is to make the laws of this State cannot but favor the Evening American's plan to bring some relief to the families of public servants."

2 IN DORY LOST OFF SABLE

Two fishermen, known only as "Joaquin" and "Jon," and members of the crew of the Gloucester fishing schooner Edith Rose, may be lost at sea, the schooner reported today when it arrived in Boston.

On the other hand, the men may have been picked up by some other craft on the La Havre Bank off Cape Sable, or may have rowed the 6 miles to land, if the fog that enveloped them lifted soon enough.

The dory crews of the schooners were "making a set" last Friday on the banks when the fog closed down.

All the dories were picked up excepting that occupied by "Joaquin" and "Jon." Several other vessels were fishing in the vicinity, and it is believed the men may have been picked up by one of them.

'MERRY, MERRY' PLAYERS WILL CHEER VETS

The next semi-monthly entertainment for the "boys" at the United States Veterans' Hospital, West Roxbury, under auspices of the Boston Evening American will be conducted next Wednesday afternoon. The principal entertainers will be members of "Merry, Merry," the successful musical comedy now playing at Plymouth Theatre.

The management of this production will send several members of the company to the hospital to cheer the war-scarred veterans still under treatment there. Among those who are to help spread sunshine for these war heroes are Marie Saxon, star of the show, who will offer several songs and dances. Others who will "do their stuff" for the "boys" are Harry Puck, comedian of the production; Marea Kerns, a Quincy girl, who has made big strides in musical comedy during the past three years; Molly Marlowe and Molly Morey. The Specialty Vanderbilt Girls, one of the features of the show, whose clever dancing has made a tremendous hit, will also display their talents for the sick veterans.

WOMAN NEAR DEATH IN DRINKING BOUT FALL

Chicago, April 26 (I.N.S.).—Mrs. Corrine Jenkins, twenty-nine, is near death as the result of a fall from the third floor apartment of Emro E. Kresin, a salesman. Kresin is held by the police, who say he admitted staging an all-night drinking part and that he made an improvised sling to lower the woman from his window to avoid detection, such parties not being allowed by his landlord. She slipped through the sling, he said, and fell to the cement court. She sustained a fractured skull. George L. Jenkins, her husband, arrived from Beloit, Wis., saw her at the hospital, then visited the police station and shouted at Kresin: "It's a good thing for you that you are locked up where I can't reach you."

YOUTH SEIZED AS 'HUGGER'

It was a timely entrance into Thorndike street, East Cambridge, that Patrolman Timothy Toomey made early today, but it was decidedly untimely for sixteen-year-old Francis Kimball, who was arrested as a "Jack the Hugger."

Kimball was arrested after a chase of four blocks from Otis and Seventh streets, following his alleged attack on Mrs. Margaret Keenan of No. 136 Cambridge street, East Cambridge.

When the policeman turned into Thorndike street he noticed a youth trailing Mrs. Keenan and the officer fell in behind on his rubber heels.

The procession proceeded to Otis and Seventh streets, where the youth is alleged to have thrown his arms about the woman and to have attempted to throw her to the ground.

Patrolman Toomey raced up, but the youth, spying the officer, fled four blocks before he was caught by the policeman at Ninth and Cambridge streets.

Young Kimball was booked on a charge of assault and battery. A knife with a three-inch blade was found in his possession.

TWO JONES, ONE TOO MANY

Santa Cruz, Cal., April 26 (A.P.)—Captain Orville I. Clampitt, army chaplain, acquitted last week in a court-martial of charges of improper conduct toward a Kansas girl, today was apparently exonerated of all blame for an embarrassing incident in a hotel here.

Captain Clampitt, seeking rest after the trial, registered at the hotel as "Mr. William Jones." A woman, wishing to avoid a possible series of social affairs, registered as "Mrs. Helen Jones."

A man, who proved to be "Mrs. Jones'" husband, and a woman asked to scan the register. The hotel management declined to wake guests ot so early an hour, the man and woman agreeing to wait until the "Jones" left their rooms.

Captain Clampitt arrived in the lobby first. The woman is said to have flicked his nose with a newspaper and called him a "home wrecker." The chapiain withheld comment. The husband then interviewed his wife and apologized to Captain Clampitt.

B. & M. FLIER CHRISTENED

The "Flying Yankee," new crack train put in service today between Boston and Portland on the Boston & Maine, was christened at North Station just before it pulled out on its maiden trip.

Miss May C. Milliken of Melrose, president of the freshman class of Radcliffe College and daughter of Arthur P. Milliken, superintendent of the Boston & Maine Portland division, officiated.

As Miss Milliken broke a large bottle of Berlbend, Me., spring water on the pilot of the engine the contents splashed over Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols, who was a guest at the christening.

Approximately 1,000 people witnessed the ceremony, said to be the first christening of a train in railroad history. Among the B. & M. Railroad officials who attended were Vice-President Gerrit Fort, General Superintendent Samuel E. Miller and Superintendent Milliken.

The new train makes the trip to Portland, 110 miles, in two hours and forty minutes, with stops at Lawrence, Haverhill and Dover, N. H. It leaves North Station on the northern trip at 9 a. m., and southbound, leaves Portland at 2 p. m.

Three veteran railroaders make up the engine crew of the Flying Yankee. They are William J. Shackley of Danvers, first engineer; Justin P. Nowell of Somerville, second engineer, and E. Johnstone of Somerville, fireman.

The train is a sister train of the Pine Tree Limited.

While sewing in the front portion of her home she said she heard some one apparently ripping down the fence in the rear of her home. Grasping a flatiron for a weapon, she rushed out and seized the boy while a neighbor telephoned for the police.

The boy said he was trying to get near the garage to examine some clothing hanging within.

BRITISH SHIP RATIONS WATER-LOGGED SCHOONER

Baltimore, April 26 (I.N.S.).—The lumber schooner Roseway is in distress 150 miles off Chesapeake Bay, according to radio dispatches received here today. The British steamer Davisan wirelessed that she had succeeded in getting food aboard the Roseway, which is waterlogged.

Overcome by Gas

Worcester, April 26.—Mrs. Viola Degnan of No. 84 Jaques avenue, was overcome by gas while cooking dinner in her home and only the timely discovery of the woman by a neighbor saved her from death.

FISHING BOATS CRASH; ONE LOSES MAST, STEM

With her bowsprit gone and her mast broken off between truck and deck, the Boston dragger Blanche and Ida wobbled into port today and reported she had been in collision Saturday night, with the fishing schooner Evelyn G. Sears, outward bound. The crash occurred near Highland Light, while the dragger was bringing in 7,000 pounds of fish. The Evelyn G. Sears suffered little damage.

SOMERVILLE MAN DIES OF GAS IN BED

Ernest T. Martin, fifty-five, of No. 19 Knapp street, Somerville, was found dead from gas poisoning in bed at his home today.

His wife, Isabel, smelled gas and notified the police. Patrolman Edmund Keane and Joseph Blake forced the door of Martin's bedroom, and found his body. They say a gas jet was unscrewed and gas was flowing from the pipe.

6 Perfect Bananas in a box —Why?

Scientifically RIPENED – trademarked– boxed – to protect the fruit – and you!

"A NEW idea!" It certainly is. But a long, long time in the preparation. Here it is:

We buy the finest bananas grown by the famous United Fruit Company.

Only the best fruit may become MELORIPE

In specially-built ripening chambers in Boston we duplicate, scientifically, the sunny warmth of the Tropics—the temperature, and even the humidity. The fruit ripens slowly, thoroughly, naturally.

(You can't hurry a banana—not if it is to be perfectly ripe, perfectly digestible, perfectly delicious!)

After many days MELORIPE is ready for you. The golden fruit is rigidly inspected. Each perfect banana is trademarked MELORIPE so you may know what you are getting.

Then swiftly, skillfully, gently, it is packed in a protective red-and-yellow box and —then delivered, daily, to your market by motor cars, so you may have it fresh, luscious, perfect.

A new idea? Yes. A good idea? Your grocer thinks so. But even better than the idea is the perfect fruit. The name

MELORIPE—is on every single banana!

ATTLEBORO WOMAN'S BODY FOUND IN RIVER

Attleboro, April 26.—The body of Anna Morin, 23, daughter of Joseph Morin, a carpenter, of Central avenue, Seekonk, was found in the Ten Mile river by Constable Edward Cass of Seekonk and Henry Dunbar, Medical Examiner Jesse Battershaw gave suicide as the cause of death.

Miss Morin, a pretty young woman, had been despondent of late, and had called upon Dr. E. C. Cormier of Pawtucket. Dr. Cormier told the officials he did not think her condition warranted alarm. Clad only in a nightdress and wearing shoes, she had gone to the river, about 500 feet from her home.

BARRYMORE TO MAKE FILMS OF SHAKESPEARE

Assails 'Romeo and Juliette' as Not Being a Real Love Story

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

LOS ANGELES, April 26.—What a blow to Shakespearean lovers after all these years to have John Barrymore say that "Romeo and Juliet" is no love-story and Romeo is a weakling.

"If I had to play in "Romeo and Juliet" I would choose Mercutio." Mr. Barrymore said. "He is a dashing young fellow and I think that for Romeo's sake it was a fortunate thing Mercutio was killed early in the play. There really are no love scenes in "Romeo and Juliet,' and the scene in the balcony might as well have been played by radio—I cannot see it as a motion picture."

John Barrymore

There is a possibility that Mr. Barrymore will bring Shakespeare to the screen following the completion of "Manon Lescaut," as his first picture for United Artists. He is considering "Richard the Third," a character he believes should have exceptional pictorial personality, a devastating lover with a sense of real comedy. Mr. Barrymore says he will never appear in a modern story, and he will not definitely decide on "Richard the Third" until he finds how the public accepts "Don Juan" and "Manon Lescaut."

ALL of which reminds me that negotiations have been going on with Alan Crosland to direct John Barrymore's first United Artists' production but as it happens Jack Warner holds a week to week contract with Crosland with permission to exercise an option and I do not believe Mr. Warner has any intention of relinquishing his hold.

Mr. Crosland directed "Don Juan" and is now working on "Manon Lescaut."

BOTH Richard Barthelmess and Sidney Olcott, his director, looked at enough tests last week to fill the largest vault in captivity and now it seems the plum has been awarded to Dorothy Dunbar, an F. B. O. player and the unanimous choice of all concerned.

R. Barthelmess

Miss Dunbar has been loaned to Mr. Barthelmess and will play the role of leading lady in "The Amateur Gentleman," by Geoffrey Farmer. Put her name down in your book because Sidney Olcott says her part is a good one and the Barthelmess open at bat for the director, Sidney certainly ought know.

WEDDING bells will soon ring for Lois Weber, woman director and Captain Grantz. That piece of news I picked up from a close friend of Miss Weber who says that Capt. Gantz is the owner of a large ranch not far from Los Angeles and is not associated with the film business.

Miss Weber was formerly the wife of Phillip Smalley, who for many years was her leading man in the pictures she directed. Only recently she finished "The Star Maker" for Universal with Billie Dove, Francis X. Bushman and Warner Oland in the leads.

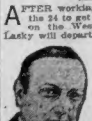
Marriage, we are told, will not interrupt Miss Weber's screen-making.

ANY hope that Anna Q. Nilsson had had a vacation has been dashed to the ground by First National, who have just informed her that she will play the feminine lead in "Collusion," by J. E. Harold Terry. (Name not copyrighted.) Lewis Stone will be featured with Miss Nilsson. This ought to be good news to the followers of this pair.

Anna Q. Nilsson

AFTER working 12 hours out of the 24 to get production started on the West Coast, Jesse L. Lasky will depart for New York on Wednesday, and Hector Turnbull will accompany him especially to spend his time in New York visiting plays and seeing if Fox has left anything in the mart that will film.

Which reminds me that all of the film companies are more or less worried over Fox's monopoly of plays. Fox has a corner on the market.



Jesse Lasky

THE movies get everyone. Only the other night I was dining at the Writers' Club and was asked to meet a distinguished looking man who had played a small part in "Hilenot." Who do you think he was? One of my first Sunday school teachers. She came from my home town and her name is Ethel Grain, daughter of Judge Grain. As I remember her she was considered one of the most beautiful girls in the small Illinois village where I first saw the light of day. Now that she is older she has lost none of the charm that made her the belle of the town.

Held Up in Doorway

Two young armed thugs held up and robbed Joseph Meyer of No. 12 Columbia street, Cambridge, in the doorway of his home.

D'MILLE FILM AT FENWAY

The dramatically terrible conditions that attended the fall of the late Czar of Russia are pictured graphically—and in the typically Cecil B. DeMille manner—in "The Volga Boatman," new film at the Fenway. It bears all the characteristics of it's DeMille direction and, after a most effective beginning, the action surges to the heights of melodrama in a rush of tears and sentiment.

As the story is placed in Russia there is, of course, a revolution, but it takes place on the screen in the more tasteful manner of interesting sidelights rather than with the morbid details of mobs of Reds running amuck and thirsting for the gore of their aristocratic victims. The drama, swirls around one of these "victims" in the person of the plebeyesque Elinor Fair—and one of the more interesting members of the mob, William Boyd in his character of the tawny boatman.

If there is any "big" scene, it is probably when the haughty lady is taken by the revolutionists and is allowed but five minutes to live before the big boatman must execute her. With superb indifference the lady proceeds to while away the remaining moments by strumming carelessly upon the piano. Such a show of courage completely unnerves the grim executioner and they fall into a "clinch" which is the more enhanced with soulful subtitles.

MLLE. MODESTE AT OLYMPIA

About a score of years ago, Victor Herbert, then a budding composer, and Henry Blossom, a playwright, combined their talents and wrote the book and lyrics for a lively operetta called "Mlle. Modiste." The music brought undying fame to Herbert and instant recognition to the young Vienese prima donna who was selected for the title role—Fritzi Scheff. Now Corinne Griffith, fair filmister, is "Mlle. Modiste" in its screen version at the Olympia.

Several musical comedies have been filmed in recent years, but "Mlle. Modiste" has more real plot, romance and basis for that matter, plus a delightful French atmosphere, both piquant and original. Miss Griffith has enhanced the opera greatly and, with the advantages of the screen, has given its production a realism that is entertaining and accurate.

A capable cast supports the star, among them Norman Kerry, Willard Louis, Paulette Duval, Dorothy Cummings and Dorothy Phillips. Further embellishment is added to the work of the featured players by numbers of pretty "extra girls," who adorn the fashion parade sequences. Shorter scenes, a news and a bill of vaudeville complete the program.

SEVEN ARE ARRESTED AFTER FIGHT AT CAFE

A pie-throwing contest which developed into a fist fight and then a near riot in a Central square, Cambridge, restaurant, resulted in the arrest of seven men who were charged with disturbing the peace.

A wagon-load of police rounded up the seven patrons, but not until two of the contestants were battered and bruised, the stock of the restaurant badly damaged, and two large plate glass windows smashed.

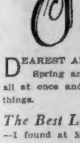
DEAREST ANNE:

Spring and Summer seem to be here all at once and the shops are full of new things.

The Best Looking Tailored Suits

—I found at Meyer Jonasson's on Tremont St., the other day. And only $25.00! Beautifully hand tailored, little box coats either single or double-breasted in stunning tweeds or twills. These suits sell everywhere for a great deal more. The collars and shoulders fit beautifully, the buttonholes are all hand made and the linings are hand sewn.



Paris says suits, and I say Meyer Jonasson's for suits. Theirs are made of beautiful imported tweeds in either plain or fancy checked or plaid patterns, also fine twills in navy or black, some plain, others exquisitely trimmed with braid or satin. And everyone lined with splendid quality crepe de chine. Is there any other place you can get such a modish suit for $25.00? No—one from Meyer Jonasson's should be in every Spring wardrobe. They come in all colors and sizes from 14 up. The skirts are neat and have double kick pleats at the side. Truly they are a wonderful value and I feel sure that no place in the country can duplicate suits such as these at this price. The tailoring is of the highest type, and these smart suits will always retain their shape. Every one looks as if it were made to order.

Tailored suits have an air of Spring about them and are certainly the most fashionable thing one can wear this season. I couldn't live without mine.

Meyer Jonasson's is not a store of large profits, it is one where you always get value and more than value for your money. They also have a beautiful enlarged toilet goods department. And I must tell you of the most heavenly Roger & Gallet "Fleurs d'Amour" bath salt tablets I got there the other day. $1.50 for 12, and so delightfully refreshing. The new "Jade" are $1.00, too. Do try them. You must have a tailored suit, and go to Meyer Jonasson's for it.

On a Warm, Sultry Day

—there is no place like a cool, comfortable verandah. And the most attractive ones are fitted up with lovely Chinese Peel furniture from the Paine Furniture Co., 81 Arlington St. Of course, you know that Peel chairs, tables, etc., are made in Shanghai from the bark of rattan very finely and beautifully woven on a frame work of strong, sturdy malacca. They are very artistic and chosen by the most discriminating.

Beautiful peacock chairs, comfortable chaise longues, easy reading chairs, rockers, hour glass chairs and pretty tea tables all add to the charm and comfort of the modern porch or sun-room. And they are not expensive either. Paine's are selling a lovely hour-glass chair like the little sketch for $13.50. It has nice wide arms and is decorated with a little black in Oriental effect. Truly a beautiful and useful article for the most fastidious. Smaller chairs are only $12.50, and a little hour-glass stool $2.75. It has many uses—pretty beside a low chair for flowers and a book—may also be used as a tea table. The golden creamy tone of Chinese Peel harmonizes with all other types of wicker furniture, too.

Another advantage in having Peel furniture is that it is extremely light and can be moved about with no trouble at all. You would love the black markings on it; the designs are unusual without being obtrusive. Every piece is uniquely shaped, and a set is the loveliest thing I know of.

Of course, cushions of gay stripes add a striking note, and the Paine Furniture Co. will make them to go with your color scheme.

You really must go up to this beautiful store at 81 Arlington St. You will want some of this fascinating furniture on your verandah so you can lounge in peace, beauty and charm and comfort these coming warm days.

A Moth Can't Live

—in your fur coat if it is sent to Geo. L. Griffin's, 379 Washington St., to be stored for the Summer. Every coat is cleaned by a wonderful blowing process, 100 lbs. pressure of compressed air gets all the dirt and dust out of the pockets and fur leaving the coat clean, fluffy and ready to be stored in the vault where the temperature is always 32 degrees.

I must tell you—I went all through Griffin's cold storage plant, and I was very forcibly struck with the care and treatment given each garment put in their care. These are special racks for muffs, others for neckpieces and still others for the fur coats. Every one is marked with a tag, the numbers in rotation so as to facilitate their quick removal in the Fall. The room is large and dry, and I am sure no moth could live in such a frigid temperature.

Griffin's rates for storage are 2% of a fair valuation, the minimum charge being $2.00 on fur coats, and $1.00 on small articles.

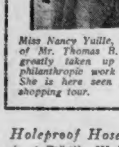
Why let your costly furs hang in your warm closet all Summer in danger of being ruined by moths, fire or even theft? Griffin's will call with their own trucks for your furs, keep them in safety all year and deliver them to you whenever you are in need of them. They are insured and given the best possible treatment. It makes no difference whether or not you bought your furs at Griffin's.

No make arrangements now that the warm weather is here to have one of Griffin's trucks come and take your furs and protect them during these perilous months to come. You will never regret it. After you have once had Griffin's care for your furs you will never send them anywhere else. I am having them call for mine tomorrow. And you should, too.

Miss Nancy Yuille, charming daughter of Mr. Thomas B. Yuille, has been greatly taken up with social and philanthropic work this past season. She is here seen going on a little shopping tour.

Holeproof Hose Headquarters

—is at Talbot's, 375 Washington St., and, my dear, I have never seen such stockings for wear as well as looks and fine finish. They can't be equalled. People are coming to realize more and more "Holeproof's" lasting strength and beauty. If you have never worn them I wish you would run into the Talbot Co. and try a pair. They have them at all prices from $1.00 up.



Just think of a finely woven silk chiffon stocking at $1.69! With mercerized lisle top, sole and toe, they come in all the new Spring shades. The foot is seamless and well shaped.

A bit more sturdy are stockings of pure thread silk with mercerized lisle top, sole and toe, and these are $1.00, too. Truly these are exceptional hose for everyday wear and come in 14 lovely tones.

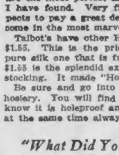
Simply beautiful are Holeproof full-fashioned, all-silk chiffon stockings at $1.85. I always wear them for best. One's legs look slim, stylish and fascinating in chiffon. They are the most perfect all-silk chiffon stocking I have found. Very fine, the type one expects to pay a great deal more for, and they come in the most marvelous array of shades.

Talbot's have other Holeproof stockings at $1.55. This is the price of a good quality pure silk one that is full-fashioned. Also at $1.35 is the splendid extra stretch elastic-top stocking. It makes a "Holeproof" famous.

Be sure and go into Talbot's for all your hosiery. You will find just what you want, know it is Holeproof and get excellent wear, at the same time always look stylish.

"What Did You Get, Bill?"

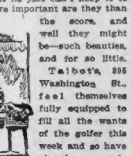
—asks the golf enthusiast out on the links in the morning. "3 for $2.75—or 95 cents a pair at Talbots," answers his partner, who is so proud of his new golf hose which he got at Talbot's that he just can't keep it to himself. Much more important are they than the score, and well they might be—such beauties, and for so little. Talbot's, 395 Washington St., feel themselves fully equipped to fill all the wants of the golfer this week and so have placed on sale these new Spring golf hose, which are not too heavy and not too light for wear now. The styles are various and very new—stripes, plaids and checks, they come in stylish sporty blues, browns, tans and grays. Think of it, only 95 cents a pair at Talbot's! There is no need of hunting high and low for golf hose, go straight to 375 Washington St. and the men of the family will be pleased.



Golf sweaters of all types I saw there the other day and so inexpensive, too. In either V-neck or coat style the prices ranged from $5.00 to $18.00. This does seem an exceptional opportunity to get the golfer properly clad for the royal and ancient game, and I know Bob will be pleased if you buy him 3 pairs of those golf hose.

As Refreshing as Green Grass

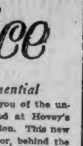
—are the lovely green glass salad plates I found at Jones, McDuffee & Stratton's, corner of Franklin and Hawley Sts., the other day. Shaped like a big green lettuce leaf, they have a delicious look about them that is cool and appetizing. They are very inexpensive, too; think of 6 for $3.50 or 6 for $4! It is a very new and exclusive pattern, a set of these plates makes a most welcome shower or wedding present. Mail orders are filled. The size is just right to set beside a dinner plate to simplify the serving of a luncheon or dinner. I love them. Green always looks pretty on a table. These salad plates also come in amber. Do go into Jones, McDuffee & Stratton's and see them and the other pieces of china and glass for which this firm has become famous. I sent Louise some of these plates and, as green is her favorite color, she was thrilled. You should have some, too.



A Negligee Is Essential

—these days, and I must tell you of the unusually charming ones I found at Hovey's in their misses' underwear section. This new department is on the third floor, behind the misses' gray shop and next the beauty parlor.

And such negligees—beautiful crepe de chine or shot taffeta in soft, becoming shades with row upon row of fine creamy lace, dainty little pockets and French flowers; they are only $10.95. Others a little less frilly are $10.00. The colors are fascinating: lovely turquoise blue, stylish jade green, becoming rose, flesh and honeydew. Just the thing every girl has always hoped to own, at last obtainable through this splendid misses' 3rd floor department. These negligees are made the right length for misses and small women who wear sizes 14 to 20.



Simply darling are other negligees of fine French voile in dainty new Parisian patterns. $5.95 and look just like georgette or chiffon. The colors are sweet and they are lavishly trimmed with fine val lace. Cool and lovely, also wash well. One should be in the overnight case of every fastidious girl. So many negligees bought in a women's department do not fit the smaller girl, but these in this misses' section do.

Hovey's have kimonos of black flat crepe for traveling, too, in this department. All the new negligees open down the front; the slip-on style is no longer fashionable, as it was found impractical.

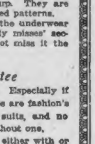
For everyday wear are negligees of good quality crepe for from $1.95 up. They are Japanese style in pretty flowered patterns.

Anything and everything in the underwear line you will find in this lovely misses' section on the third floor. Do not miss it the next time you are in town.

Invest in a Vestee

—and you will be well repaid. Especially if you get one at Filene's. Vestees are fashion's decree with the new tailored suits, and no Spring costume is complete without one.

A sports suit vestee to wear either with or without a coat is made of pastel toned fine linen and has scallops all the way down the front. Fashionable worn either high or low. $6.75 at Filene's on the street floor. A similar model also comes for $5.00 in heavier linen. The colors are lovely—green, blue, tan, maize, and also white. They are splendid for golf, too, the short sleeve gives plenty ease and freedom and the two little pockets are handy for an extra golf ball or hanky. These blouse vestees are adorably smart, everything is new about them, the cut, material and the scallops. You would be delighted with one.



I really think Filene's has a marvelous assortment of neckwear, the newest designs seem to be first to get the new things.

Other vests to wear with your coat or as a front for a dress come in bengaline or pique. The latter are only $3.50 and most becoming. There is nothing much more charming than white or a soft pastel shade near one's throat. They give many a costume a most distinctive and bewitching air. The simple tailored vestee makes the mannish tailored suit truly feminine and, above all, they seem to be Spring itself.

Filene's have vestees of dainty silks, colored organdies and beautiful hand embroidered linens. I know you want one of these modish accessories and you'll want two or three when you see them at Filene's.

Paris Acclaims Prints

—as a high note of fashion. Thresher's, 19 Temple Place, are having a sale of new high-grade printed crepes, georgettes and flat crepes. This sale comes at a very opportune moment in planning Spring and Summer wardrobes. They are simply lovely and I just couldn't resist going in the other day and getting enough for two new frocks. And I wasn't extravagant either.

Printed crepes, 40 inches wide, are of splendid quality pure silk and come in all the newest designs at only $2.15 a yard. These silks sold a week ago for $2.95! The latest colorings, including plenty of gray, navy and tan, as well as fashionable green, rose and yellow. Many stylish black and whites, too. Polka-dot, geometrical futuristic as well as flowered designs. And only $2.15 a yard, really a remarkable value!

Gayly flowered printed georgette, 40 inches wide, is $1.35 a yard and makes the most attractive afternoon and dinner gowns. Also very becoming as scarf, and Thresher's will hemstitch the ends for 9 cents a yard.

Bordered crepes are stunning. Thresher's have some of wonderful quality and lovely patterns, 54 inches wide for $2.25. Two or three yards is enough for a dress.

I find McCall patterns which Thresher also sells awfully good. Note on the sketch is No. 4423 and only 45 cents. It is very stylish, made up in one of these prints. It took me no time at all and cost so little.

Do go in to Thresher's sale of new prints. You won't be stylish if you haven't at least one frock of this type this year and this is a splendid opportunity.

Affectionately, dear Anne,

BETTY ALDEN'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY

Chestnut Hill Horse Show to Be Held on Saturday, May 29

WHAT WITH ALL THE interested agitation surrounding the "Races" at the Country Club, that tried and true event of local horsemen, the Chestnut Hill Horse Show comes in for its own share of sporting attention. May 29, a Saturday, is dedicated to this informal event with George Frost holding managerial reins.

THE CHESTNUT HILL show, long-time favorite of horse lovers hereabouts (it's gone from beginnings most unostentatious, twenty years or so ago, to its present large proportions) always a May 30th affair, is this year to be celebrated on the Saturday preceding.

MR. FROST, now right in the thick of arrangements, is rounding out the usual interesting program. It commences with the morning's first class, for children and their mounts and ends in early twilight with the spectacular hunt teams as finish.

SURELY THE HORSE-LOVING fraternities are promised a gala season, what with the Chestnut Hill Show, the Millwood Hunt's two-day affair early in June, at Framingham, and the two days of racing at the Country Club.

UTOPIA LATER in the season has a pretty meet on the greensward at that smart and distinctive North Shore Club, giving a fillip to Autumn's schedule. It's a prospect, in truth, to delight horse owners themselves and that social legion which loves to follow the meets.

AT THE MOMENT every eye, so to speak, looks toward Belmont Park and the Bostonians assembled there for the United Hunts Meet. Messrs. Gordon Prince, Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., Reginald W. Bird, Alvin T. Bostwell, Augustus P. Goodwin and Edwin S. Webster, Jr., are over there for this Belmont Park revival of the great classic.

THIS IS THEATRICAL week, socially speaking. Harvard's Hasty Pudding men with "1776" come back to home fields after their ambitious whirl around a "one-night stand" circle. "Come Across," bearing Vincent Club brand, has its three days' presentation.

FRIENDLY RIVALS these two sets, sharing the Hollis Street Theatre and giving society its annual taste of excellent amateur stage productions. Tuesday evening brings the Hasty Pudding town premiers, Thursday evening the Vincent's with Society applauding both.

AGAINST THE VOSE Gallery's smoke-velvet walls hang "Miss Margaret Fitzhugh Browne's paintings in bright profusion, and through its spaciousness moves this afternoon a company bidden to a private view of the Browne works.

FAVORITE ARTIST of a large Boston circle consequentially placed, is Miss Browne, and the private view extending into days of exhibition (two weeks in all), is a notable feature of the Artistic Spring calendar which, truth to tell, fairly bubbles with openings.

OFF ON ITS second big week the new-membership drive for the Soldiers and Sailors' Club takes its markedly successful way, much to the rejoicing of Mrs. Charles P. Greenough, 2d, Mrs. Barrett Wendell and Miss Margaret B. Slade, leaders.

MESDAMES NORMAN W. CABOT, Louis Curtis, Jr. Gardiner H. Fiske, William A. Gaston, Curtis Guild, Paul M. Hubbard, Ronald T. Lyman and Walter Merriam Pratt are enrolled as assistants—the move designed to augment membership rolls at dues to fit every purse.

INDEFATIGIBLE WORKERS to do this include are also Mrs. Arthur J. Kelly, Mrs. John P. Feeney, Mrs. Ely Feibleman, Mrs. Philip S. Sears, Mrs. Albert B. Wells and Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, to whom the new clubhouse in Fayette street is the realization of a dream.

PROBABLY IN ALL the crowded Opera House for the Conservatory's "Madama Butterfly" there was no happier person than the venerable George Washington Brown, staunch supporter of the Conservatory and all its works.

QUITE AS PLEASED, too, was H. Wendell Endicott, a comparatively new comer to the ranks of Conservatory backers. He and Mrs. Endicott entertained a box party for "Butterfly," which is writen down a distinct hit in Boston artistic achievement.

MRS. NATHANIEL THAYER, with Mrs. Clarence R. Edwards, has orchestra places; also F. Murray Forbes and his family; Mrs. Alvan Tufts Fuller, handsome in ecru silk and lace, and Madame Fuller, in black, were notable box hostesses.

IN THE SMARTEST of tan ensembles touched brilliantly with scarlet, Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, with her small son, was from every side showered with felicitations upon her peculiar spouse's huge success as orchestra leader and opera director.

AN OVATION greeted Mr. Goodrich himself who, with the stunning prima donna and other opera principals, including Mr. St. Leger of the Chicago Civic company, were called again and again before the curtain. Certainly "Madama Butterfly" is another leaf in the laurel wreath of Mr. Goodrich.

EUROPE UPSET BY IMPERIALISM OF MUSSOLINI

Premier's Demand for More Colonies May Prove Menace to Peace Abroad

Basle, Switzerland, April 26 (A.P.).—Will a Mussolini imperialism menace the movement for European reconciliation and reconstruction begun at Locarno and represented permanently by the League of Nations?

This is a question which a special correspondent of the Associated Press, who has just left Italy, found agitating many minds there, even transcending in interest the internal situation in which Mussolini is believed to have established undisputed dictatorship and complete mastery of the State.

WANT MORE COLONIES.

All responsible information obtained in Rome indicates that Mussolini, realizing that lack of raw material handicaps the country from the very start, wants more colonies.

Last year Italy's unfavorable trade balance reached 5,000,000,000 lire. Her imports, chiefly wheat and oil, from the United States alone aggregated 4,000,000,000 lire more than her exports to the United States. Wheat purchases in the United States constitute the biggest adverse item in the Italian trade balance, and to offset this Mussolini has launched his spectacular "battle of grain," in which the peasants of the peninsula country are contributing to national solidarity by endeavoring to augment the harvest.

"ZONES OF INFLUENCE."

Where, however, will Mussolini get his desired colonies? That is another question which is anxiously put at Rome. The recent landing of an Italian military contingent on the border of Somaliland, East Africa, indicates to observers that the Fascist premier pre.umably will, like the Japanese in Manchuria and Shantung, endeavor to create "zones of influence" in Africa.

This policy already has begun as regards Abyssinia, which joined the league primarily to prevent encroachments on her sovereign rights.

GIRLS TELL HOW THEY'D SPEND $1,000 A DAY

Charity and Thrift Figure Largely as Motives of Evening American Readers

Would "Peaches" Browning, child wife of New York's Cinderella man who is said to find a $1000 bill under her breakfast plate each morning, ever think of buying a half bushel of potatoes with her "pin money?"

That's what Mrs. C. H. Bemis of No. 221 Springdale avenue, Everett would do, if she had $1,000 for "just one morning."

Charity and a solicitude for their old dads and mothers were the predominant feelings expressed in the first batch of letters from girl readers who tell how they would spend $1,000 a day.

"The very first thing I would do," writes Frances Greene of No. 55 Revere street, Winthrop, "would be to make my mother and father happy." Then she would "spread sunshine to those less fortunate than I am." Families of wounded and ill veterans would get some of the money, if Frances had it. She would spread kindness as "far as the money would go."

Jessie Willmer of No. 12 Randolph road, Mattapan, is twenty years old and "just wild about finery," but she would send the first thousand to "dad who has had a nervous breakdown." She would spend the second thousand for a bungalow and the third would go to her mother. The other thousands would be spent for pretty clothes for "me and mine."

Some would be real thrifty and others would safely their long-felt desires if they should come into the good fortune of "Peaches."

"I do wish I could have one of those $1,000 bills for just one morning," writes Mrs. Ellen C. Taylor of No. 52 Westland avenue, Boston. "Oh! Boy! I'd run to the bank where I got all of $13 safely put away. I'd put that $1,000 right there, then sit down and think of all the pretty things I have always wanted. I would also watch for a chance to take a flier in real estate."

WANTS BUNGALOW.

Germaine Gaudreau of No. 62 Lawton avenue, Lynn, would buy a "nice bungalow and then trinkets, etc." Mrs. A. A. Collins of No. 3 Washington street, Fair Haven, would put $800 a day in the bank and buy a farm. Ethel M. Edwards is provident of the future. She would put the first five thousand in the bank for a trust fund for her old age.

Every girl reader of the Boston Evening American has some idea of what she would do with $1,000 a day. Tell the City Editor in a 100-word letter.

BOSTON RADIO AMERICAN

VOICING THE GREAT DEMOCRACY OF THE AIR

SAMUEL CURTIS, JR., Radio Editor

Now that Daylight Saving time is in force, all distance seeking radio fans will have to sit up an extra hour in order to hear the Western stations.

BORAH'S RADIO BILL BEFORE SENATE

Senator Borah's new radio bill, together with the Dill-White twin bills, is now before the Senate Committee for consideration. But the new bill is quite different from the others in two particulars. They are: The placing of the regulating authority in the hands of a commission and anti-monopoly clauses, which threaten the existence of the American commercial radio communication systems.

TO ELIMINATE MONOPOLY.

This recently proposed legislation attempts to eliminate a radio monopoly if it exists, and to prevent the consolidation of radio interests in the future. This it undertakes through the inclusion of several anti-monopoly clauses which would grant a National Radio Commission of three men authority to determine whether or not a radio monopoly does exist, and to grant all its transmitting licenses and refuse to license or relicense stations believed to be under the control of such a monopoly.

As the Radio Corporation is today considered a monopoly insofar as the transmission of radio messages abroad is concerned, although it has never been proven an unlawful monopoly, the commission might consider it such, and close all its stations including all our transoceanic transmitters. This would cut off the United States from the world as far as radio is concerned by killing all our international radio communication.

PLEASES CABLE INTERESTS.

It is pointed out by some versed in analyzing legislation and regulations, that these anti-monopoly clauses will please the cable interests, for if they were carried out, it would give the cables all the foreign traffic and virtually a monopoly in world communications again.

Although the Radio Corporation is said to handle only 20 per cent. of the trans-Atlantic traffic and 50 per cent. of the Pacific traffic, its elimination from the field as a competitor of the cables would be received with rejoicing in those offices.

In fact, some intimate that the clauses referred to are about what the cable interests would have injected into a bill had they been asked in while their own lobbyist Charles attributes the drastic sections to more or less radical interests which bespoke their ideas during the recent hearings, the same amounts of the Borah bill as that being the Senator realized to what ends his measure might be put to.

TRY TO BRIDGE GAP.

Still others believe he is trying to bridge the gap between Senate actions and to secure some legislation. However, the Senator knows what he is doing, or what he wants to do, is as usual.

Senator Borah says he became interested in radio through his relation to free speech, stating that he is satisfied that the government should keep the other continents open and not permit their monopolization by one combination. To this end he introduced his bill with the anti-monopoly clauses.

NOT to MENTION CONVENIENCE and ECONOMY. FOR Kelvinator, YOU KNOW, will give you PERFECT, PERMANENT REFRIGERATION FOR less than YOU USED to pay for ice. MARTHA LEE has RIGIDLY TESTED the KELVINATOR. CHEESE CAN BE USED IN PLACE OF MEAT

Housewives are often at their wits' end to prepare a meal without meat which will be "hearty" enough to satisfy the man of the house, and yet avoid the monotony of the endless dishes featuring fish or eggs.

Cheese contains in a concentrated form all the nourishment found in milk, and when combined with bulky foods—with cereals or vegetables, constitutes a well-balanced meal.

Cheese should not be eaten as an accessory after a heavy meal, although that is the way many people use it. Vegetables or fruit should be used in conjunction with it.

CHEESE CROQUETTES

2 tbsps. butter	½ tsp. pepper
½ cup flour	Yolks 2 eggs
1 cup milk	2 tbsps. cream
½ tsp. salt	2 cups soft mild cheese cut in small cubes

Melt butter, add flour and stir until well blended. Then pour the milk on gradually, stirring continually. Bring to the boiling point and add slightly beaten egg yolks diluted with cream, and the cheese. Season with salt and pepper. Spread on a plate and cool. Shape, dip in crumbs, egg and crumbs, and fry in deep fat. Drain on brown paper. Serve with crisp salad.

WOMEN GIVE UP SUIT FOR CLARK MILLIONS

Entry in Bible Reveals Dad Was Double of Montana Senator

Butte, Mont., April 26.—The death of the late Senator Clark's "double" and an eleventh-hour confession written in a family Bible today wrecked the suit of three Missouri women seeking a share in the $47,000,000 estate of the former Senator.

They sued, believing themselves to be the copper king's daughters. Instead, according to the confession, they are the offspring of the "double," a comparatively poor man.

As strange a tale as ever came out of the realms of fiction was revealed with the death of "the other Clark" here yesterday.

Both had the same appearance. Both, in the early days of their struggle for a fortune, led parallel lives. And both had the same name —William Andrews Clark.

But the Senator went up the ladder and became an internationally known politician, multi-millionaire copper king and an art connoisseur. His double died a tea vendor.

MYSTERY UNVEILED.

The death of the poorer Clark rung up the curtain on the mystery of half a century. Both Clarks taught schools in Missouri in 1859 and 1860 and then migrated into the slightly populated Northwest and established themselves—and a mystery.

When Senator Clark died, more than a year ago, Mrs. Effie Clark McWilliams, of Clarksdale, Mo.; Mrs. Alma E. Clark Hines of Orrick, Mo., and Mrs. Addie Clark Miller of Denver, Colo., caused a sensation by their claim to share in the great estate of the copper magnate, claiming that they were his daughters. The suit is pending still.

ROMANCE TOLD AT BIER.

Legal authorities and detectives dug back into the history of Missouri and the Clark family to attempt to establish paternity.

It was the chance discovery of a reporter, reading the obituary columns here, noticing the similarity of names and nativity of the "other Clark" which led to the revelation. He interviewed members of the family beside the bier.

Reluctantly the facts were admitted, and it was disclosed that Clark had made a final statement on his death bed in the family Bible, disclosing a strange romance with an Anna Pierce, with whom he fled in 1870 from Missouri to Montana.

Found Dead in Alley

Leo F. McCarthy, thirty-three, single, of No. 101 Russell street, Charlestown, was found unconscious in an alley of No. 23 Walker street, Charlestown, and on being taken to Haymarket Relief Station was pronounced dead.

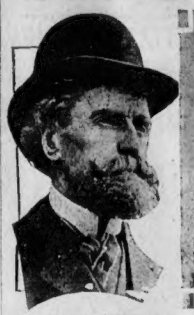
Pastors Pass Hat to Buy Suit for Minister

Because one of their clergy brothers was so impoverished that he could not buy a much-needed suit of clothes, the Baptist ministers at their meeting in Chipman Hall today passed the hat and took up a collection.

Rev. Samuel M. Lindsey, D. D., made the suggestion to help out the preacher and he announced that $35 was donated in the collection, enough to buy the new suit for the minister in time for his next Sunday's appearance in the pulpit.

"We have found practical Christianity in this response to clothe our brother," said Dr. Lindsey.

CONFESSION IN BIBLE EXPOSES CLARK'S "DAUGHTERS"

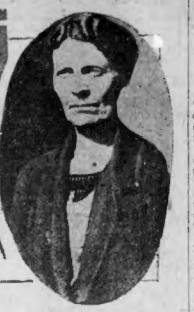


The late Senator William Andrews Clark, Montana copper magnate, whose fortune of $47,000,000 was sought by three Missouri women, who represented themselves as his daughter.

Mrs. Alma Clark Hines, who believed she was the daughter of the Copper King until a family Bible revealed that her father was the double of the Montana millionaire.

The late Mrs. Kate Clark, mother of the three women suing the estate of the millionaire. She died, keeping the secret of her "double" husband—if she knew it.

Mrs. Addie Clark Miller, another daughter of the "double." Both Clarks left Missouri and settled in Montana at the same time, thus leading the "double's" daughter into error.



Mrs. Effie Clark McWilliams. Her father and the copper magnate were both school teachers in their youth in Missouri, thus duplicating their similarity of lives. (All photos by International.)

U. S. TAX CREDIT FOR MONEY LOST

Because of a flood of inquiries relative to the 25 percent credit allowed under the new income tax regulations, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has compiled a table for the guidance of those who lost money through investments and want to know how to claim deductions.

No allowance is made for the money lost in the surtax, but in figuring the normal tax, deduction is permissable of that amount lost through investment.

Taking as an illustration a married man who earned $14,000 but lost $8000 through stock market transactions, the following table is given:

Earned net income	$14,000.00
Surtax on $14,000	48.00
5% of $960	10.80
Net income	6,000.00
Less personal exemption	2,500.00
Balance taxable at 1½%	2,500.00
Normal tax of 1½%	37.50

Twenty-five per cent. credit on the normal tax of $37.50 is $9.35. Twenty-five per cent. credit of the surtax on $40 is $10. Added, these amounts make a total credit of $19.38 which, deducted from $27.50, leaves payable a tax of $18.12.

The earned income which a taxpayer may use to determine his credit is that money received from personal services actually rendered. In the case of a partnership where salary is paid, and there is also a division of profits, the earned income is 20 per cent. of the salary received, plus the division of profits. Where the income is from business, the earned income is 20 per cent. of the amount thus received. Regardless of what the taxpayer's earned income is, it shall not be considered to be less than $5,000 in computing his earned income credit.

amateur defense chiefs, are not SOUND ASLEEP. General Mitchell says:

"The thing we need is development of civil aviation, bearing in mind that from 90 to 100 per cent. of the planes and men used in commercial aviation would be available and usable in event of war.

"The Congress of the United States should appropriate $6,000,000 a year for a few years in developing commercial aviation."

THE BOERS held their British enemies at bay for years, because every Boer had a rifle and knew how to use it. Our revolutionary ancestors were able to deal with British redcoats effectively because they had rifles, employed on Indians and bears, and knew how to use them.

Within a few years, fortunately, 50,000 Americans will be able to fly, take pride in learning how to drop bombs and use a quick firing gun in the air. That will solve our problem. Meanwhile, the whole country is wide open to attack, and all the world knows it.

THIS WRITER is able to state, with authority, that Henry and Edsel Ford are working energetically on a new three-motor airship, as nearly foolproof as possible. In such a machine, the pilot would have two engines to rely on if one went wrong, one to rely on and able to keep the ship going if two went "dead."

The chances are a thousand to one against all three going wrong at the same time.

AT THE EARLIEST possible moment, the Fords will put these THREE-MOTOR machines "in production," which means they will turn them out as fast as anybody will buy them. And within three or four years the Fords hope to produce in quantities "A three or four-passenger airship, reasonable in price."

MEANWHILE, President Coolidge and Postmaster-General New are developing a real Post Office flying service, encouraging private enterprise to build ships and put them in the air. If this policy continues, as it undoubtedly will while Coolidge is President, the nation will have, eventually, in the Post-Office service alone, more ships than any European power has, and a magnificent air army of well trained fliers.

AND THEN IT won't be necessary to worry about an incompetent navy that cannot fly to Hawaii and back, but that CAN spend millions in a year, NOT flying. Meanwhile, rich old Uncle Sam has been running great risks. It is lucky for him that the world finds itself half bankrupt and tired of war, with its chief war lords extinguished, just as flying, deadly gases and the other new weapons are discovered.

"CALICO KING'S" HEIR'S MANSION IS DESTROYED

Rumson, N. J., April 26 (A.P.)—Investigation today failed to disclose cause of the fire which destroyed Old Oaks, the home of Howard S. Borden, in River road, James Sweeney, night watchman, who discovered the blaze, surmised the building might have been struck by lightning. The damage was estimated at $250,000.

Howard S. Borden is a son of the late M. C. D. Borden, who was widely known as "the calico king." The Borden family owns the American Printing Company and its allied mills in Fall River.

COAL SHIPPERS WANT N. E. RATES INVESTIGATED

Washington, April 26 (A.P.)—The Central Pennsylvania Coal Purchasers' Association asked the interstate commerce commission today to include in its investigation of coal rates the Tidewater Transshipment charges on soft coal moving from the Southern fields to New York and New England through Hampton Roads.

The association declared the transshipment rates are "highly competitive," as between the Northern and Southern producing fields. Coal movement through Hampton Roads it was added, has greatly increased during recent years due largely to the freight rate structure.

WAR DECLARED ON TENNESSEE MOONSHINERS

Paris, Tenn., April 26 (A.P.)—Tense quiet prevailed over the hills of northeastern Henry County today as State authorities planned a "war to the end" on "moonshining."

An offensive is being planned that officials hope will end the state of terror that spread over the hills when word came down from the moonshining calm Friday that death would stalk seven other men if an arrest was made for the slaying of Thomas Evans on Sunday, April 18.

Federal aid will be sought, said District Attorney-General G. N. Sherrod, who came here to direct the drives.

More than 2,000 citizens gathered at a mass meeting and pledged their support in a drive for law enforcement and apprehension of Evans' slayers. The meeting was called by the Rev. John H. Buchanan, pastor of the First Baptist Church.

"I am hoping this man's death shall prove a Calvary to save the county," said Buchanan, in speaking of the Evans slaying.

$125,000 Church Fire

Chicago, April 26 (A.P.).—Valuable paintings and ecclesiastical objects of gold were destroyed by fire today in St. Constantine's Greek Orthodox Church here. The damage was estimated at $125,000. Crossed electric wires started the fire it is believed.

The Letters of Queen Victoria

Human Appeal in Private Documents of Greatest Woman Ruler

Guisseppe Garibaldi, Italian patriot, whose visit to England aroused great enthusiasm and brought him almost royal honors

AT THE height of the excitement in Great Britain over the war in Denmark, Giuseppe Garibaldi, fresh from his illustrious revolutionary exploits in Italy against the Austrian yoke, lands in England and is received with great acclaim by society and populace. He is entertained by Lord Palmerston and Lord Russell, leaders of the Queen's Cabinet, and is visited by the Prince of Wales.

Queen Victoria, while admiring the Italian patriot, disapproves of the almost royal honors heaped upon him for fear of complications with foreign powers.

Queen Victoria to the King of Prussia.

BALMORAL, 28th May, 1864.—You know how anxious I was from the first to prevent this unhappy war; and how much I have deprecated the violent language which has on both sides embittered the feelings of our two nations.

I should deeply regret if the prospect of Peace were to be marred by too great demands of Prussia. Your arms have been victorious, and it now depends on the use you make of your victory, whether the public opinion which now inclines to the weaker side be rallied on your side or not. Your Government has repeatedly declared that it had no ambitious objects of its own in view, which I have always believed, but, alas! not my people. If you therefore moderate your demands as much as is in your power, we may look to a great change in public feeling towards Prussia, not only in England, but in other States of Europe not immediately engaged in this quarrel.

I should therefore entreat of you most earnestly, in the interest of the world and of Peace, to consent to such concessions as Denmark would probably accept.

If you are uncompromising as to the line of frontier to be fixed in the proposed division of Schleswig, or if you make inadmissible demands for Federal fortresses and fortified ports, you will probably not only render Peace impossible, but also strengthen the prevalent belief that Prussia began this war under false pretences and with a view to her own ambitious projects.

I tremble for the consequences that might ensue.

SON OF RABBI WISE QUITS JUDAISM

DECLARES YOUNG JEWS DOUBT OWN RELIGION

New York, April 26 (A.P.).—James Freeman Wise, 23-year-old son of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Jewish Liberal leader, has renounced his intention of becoming a rabbi and severed all connection with organized Jewish theology because he is convinced Judaism, as a religion, has ceased to play a vital part in Jewish life.

Young Wise studied two years to become a rabbi. Now he intends to work to bind the Jews of America together on other grounds than those of religion. He will devote the next year to lecturing before groups of young Jews to find out how that can best be done.

Rabbi Wise, still the son who is expected at his mother's knee to become a rabbi, "feel[s] that my life's ideal, which has taught me it is more important to do what your believe is right than to do anything else."

"The two fundamental concepts of the older Judaism," the young man declared in announcing his revolt, "have broken down in our time. The concept of Israel as the messenger of redemption to mankind is quite considered by the younger Jews, something that it does not take trouble to deny them. The young Jew to find out how that can best be done.

"The other fundamental concept of Judaism, that of the Jew as a priest unto God, is no longer acceptable to me. I do not believe that I am in any sense a priest unto God, or that any other Jew is. The function of the priest was to act as a mediator between God and man, and I believe every man's highest privilege is to approach God directly with the assumption of God and desired in announcing his revolt working [illegible] to man

ARCTIC FLIERS ARE MISSING 11 DAYS

Fairbanks, Alaska, April 26 (A.P.).—Failure to hear from Captain George H. Wilkins, who left here 11 days ago for Point Barrow with the first plane of the Detroit Arctic expedition, speeded the loading of the second plane to follow him today, it is reported by the North American Newspaper Alliance.

Captain Wilkins and Ben Eielson, his pilot, hopped off for Point Barrow April 15. Although Major Thomas G. Lanphier, commander of the second section of the expedition, and those under him expressed confidence that the advance plane had reached Barrow, efforts to pick up radio signals were not successful.

Captain Wilkins carried a short wave radio set which it was believed would enable him to send back messages.

Barrow now has from eighteen to twenty hours of daylight and only a short dusk between sunset and sunrise.

Wilkins and Eielson flew the single motored Alaskan. A test flight of the larger plane of the expedition, the three-motored Detroiter, to try out new compasses delayed her completed departure.

The Detroiter weighs five tons loaded. Six hundred gallons of gasolines have been put in her tank. Those to make the flight with Major Lanphier were Charles Wisting, pilot; Howard Mason, chief engineman for the expedition; Ames Hafford, a Wright engine mechanic and a newspaper correspondent.

RELIGION AND ROYALTY

ONCE I read about myself that, being so ardent a matchmaker (that is one of the stories they like best to circulate about the too-much-discussed Regina Maria), I thought nothing of letting my daughters change their religion when they married, as I had done to secure a throne!

I never changed my religion. I was christened a Protestant and have remained one, though my husband is a Catholic and my children Greek Orthodox, which is the religion of Rumania.

We all, being civilized, respect each others' religions and live in perfect harmony despite this difference. We have never refused to go into another's churches when asked to, or when any official ceremony made it advisable.

Ever since, as a very young mother, I began to teach my children what I thought they should know of life, faith and God, I have brought them up not to be narrow about rites and formulas and canons. We all believe in one God, and He should be for us the great source of love and union, and not of strife.

My two married daughters found husbands of their own religion. But it does happen in royal lives as also, occasionally, in private lives, that there arises a conflict between love and belief. When it is a royal girl who is confronted with that problem, she cannot hide her little tragedy in secret as could another woman. The world looks on, conjecture, gossips, smiles or frowns. However she solves the question, some will disapprove.

My own mother was more severe about forms of religious conviction than am I. She never permitted religious argument before me and ruthlessly turned away any prince who, as a suitor, desired that I change my religion in order to be his wife.

I have preferred to teach my children that each religion is to be honored, that each has the same basis, and that, if sincere, any religion that strengthens, comforts and happifies its possessor is good and must be respected.

Thus, if one day a real conflict between love and religion arrives, it need not be a tragedy, but can be dealt with openly, sensibly, rationally.

DRUSES ROUTED IN BIG BATTLE

Beirut, Syria, April 26 (A.P.).—Souelda, the gateway to the mountainous region in which the Druse tribesmen have their last stronghold, has been captured from the Druses by the French forces. After a six-hour battle the tribesmen are said to have suffered heavy casualties and to have abandoned two field guns. They numbered 6,000 and offered stubborn resistance. The French threw into the offensive two columns, composed of eleven battalions of infantry, four batteries of artillery and a number of tanks and in addition used airplanes.

General Andres, known as a skilled strategist, commanded the French.

The French troops are preparing for sallying into the mountains in an endeavor to clean up the territory before the defeated Druses have a chance to reorganize.

HUNGER-CRAZED N. E. MAN STEALS ENGINE, FIGHTS 2

New York, April 26 (A.P.).—A hunger-crazed man who took possession of a New York Central locomotive today in the freight yards in Edgewith avenue was routed only after he had attacked the engineer with an iron bar and slashed a policeman with a razor.

At the police station he gave himself as John Horner of Bridgeport, Ct. and talked incoherently of not having eaten for four days.

The policeman was not wounded seriously.

MELROSE CHURCH STRUCK IN FIRST THUNDER STORM

After a profusion of sun spots and brilliant aurora borealis, April brought a heavy thunder shower to Greater Boston. Officially, there was a rainfall in Boston of .53 of an inch, but there was much more in some of the suburbs. The cupola of the First Methodist Church in Melrose was struck and damage of about $500 caused. Fair and cooler weather is promised tonight and fair with rising temperatures tomorrow.

"—and you really don't find S. S. Pierce expensive?"

"No, indeed. You see, Jack has been lecturing me on business, and now I compare the quantity in each package as well as the quality and price. It's absorbingly interesting—and it pays. . . ."

"—But I always thought that delivering from a store made things cost more. . . ."

"Not from Pierce's—Jack says that the Pierce people deliver so many orders in every neighborhood that the cost of delivering each order is very, very small. And it's so much easier and more convenient than going out to shop."

"—But, my dear, how can you be sure of getting just the right things?"

"That's the beauty of it—I can! My S. S. Pierce man 'phones me two mornings a week—he knows just what I like—how much I need—and he often tells me how I can save money. Of course, there's never any question about quality—and they're so careful about having everything correct and properly packed. . . ."

"—and you're sure they're not more expensive?"

"Positive of it. I've compared prices on my bills and found that they're actually less expensive on many things—and it's so satisfactory! Why don't you try it yourself? Ask them to put you on their telephone order list for a few weeks. . . ."

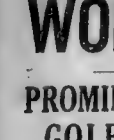
WOLLASTON TOURNEY THURSDAY TO OPEN SEASON

PROMINENT GOLFERS ENTERED

Four-Ball League and Women's Golf Matches Also in Limelight This Week

By BILL GRIMES

With a twilight open, baseball may soon be out of the way, and golf will be the principal sport in the limelight. There is no doubt in the minds of the golfers that the season is here, and the number of entries in the various tournaments scheduled for this week indicates that the game is more popular than ever. The Women's Golf Association of America has been in session today at the Brae Burn Country Club, and the first teams will play at Wollaston. The Country Club and Wannamoisett on Thursday, while the second teams will be at Fall River.



Bill Grimes

The feature of last week's matches was the clean sweep made by the Southern District second team over Brae Burn. It is on rare occasions that every member of a team turns in a winning card, but not only did the Southern team accomplish this feat but with one exception every match was a runaway.

The first open handicap medal play tournament of the season will be at Wollaston, starting on Thursday and running through Friday. The Wollaston committee has a condition for this tourney. The first wags are all in the game, while the scores although not handicapped, have been played for weeks, are tried and true. At this season of the year Wollaston is a popular course for golfers to frolic on, and a record entry is expected, but a record crowd will be on hand to battle for the two great days of play.

Practically all the big bond men in the part of the state will open their season at Wollaston on Thursday or Friday. Francis Ouimet and Jesse Guilford, who will leave for New York one week from today to rail with the Walker Cup team, will play in the Wollaston tournament, as will Billy McPhail, the hotfoiler; Ray Corkum of Brae Burn, Harold Arrell of Dedham, Chick Hodder of Commonwealth, Roy Van Arsdale of Woodland, Edmund Childs of Charles River, Bobby Cox of Tedesco, Jim Lally of Scarboro and Charlie Lanican of Worcester Vasse.

With first and second teams competing, the Ramblers Golf League will be of greater interest than ever before, as the schedule for this week and with every effort to speed the race for the championship will be hard fought from start to finish.

SPRING GRID PRACTICE ON AT HARVARD

By TED LYNCH.

Not satisfied with hogging the limelight in the Fall season, football heads are in the centre of the sport stage again today with Head Coach Horween leading some hundred football aspirants through the first round of pre-season grid training at Harvard.

A new Harvard football system, combining both eastern and western styles of play is being ushered in at each practice. Horween comes to the Ams latter with a knowledge of the system [illegible] the West and as Harvard head coach is not at [illegible] doing that his [illegible] Horween will use many plays of Western pattern this Fall.

The whys and wherefore of these plays will be ironed out within the next few weeks behind closed doors.

Horween has met only a score of the Harvard recruits and the practice will give him an excellent opportunity to study the types of boys who accompanied that remarkable feat of holding Yale to a tie last Fall. Horween will be assisted by Captain Clem Coady and a group of Harvard men whom he will recruit within the next two days.

This year's team is well supplied with veteran material. There is not a position on which Horween can not insert a veteran. The list of veterans includes Ends, Ernie Chanahe and Madison Sayles; tackles, Captain Coady, Carl Lindner and Charlie Britt; guards, Leo Ehalen Hyde Kilsour and Brodie Tripp; centers, Jake Turner and Lamar Shapiro; quarterbacks, Jake Stafford and Shorty Crawford and, backs, Andy Cruikshanks, Miller, Henry Chauncey and Izzy Zorakoi

GRIFFIN SCRAPS WITH LIBERTY AT LYNN

The Casino A. C. of Lynn will be on deck tonight with a bang up card that should bristle with action.

There are two six and three eight round bouts between boys who will provide the fans with plenty of the kind of action they like.

In the six-round bouts Jimmy Elwell of East Boston meets Kid Chapen of Newton and Jimmy Dinn of Newburyport is paired with Dinny Lint of Boston.

Kid Alberts, formerly of Quincy, now of Portsmouth, N. H., meets Jimmy McGonigle of Weymouth in the first eight, and this pair will provide plenty of fireworks as they are well fond rivals. Matty Arden of Lynn meets Harold Ellersham, the hard hitting Brockton youngster, in the semi final, and the bout promises to be a hummer all the way.

In the final bout, Red Griffin of Chelsea, tackles K. O. Liberty of Malden, Me., and this pair should put on a lively battle.

Liberty has hung up a record of knockouts at the Maine mines that stamp him as a tough opponent for any boy of his wight in New England, and in Griffen he is meeting a boy who will stand up and trade punch for punch with him.

ALL-STAR RING SHOW AT ARENA

Boston Arena Club boxing followers may have been disappointed when Frankie Genaro's last minute demands caused a cancellation of the bout with Johnny Vas, scheduled for tonight, but they will get their fill of a fistic feast Monday night at the Arena when Matchmaker George Fresnon stages an all-star card.

In the 10-round bout Joe Welsh will meet Jack Elliott of Dedham. The other 10 rounder will see Mike Murphy of Lowell pitted against Archie Walker of New York. Jim Pasnetti of Brockton and Charlie Donovan will engage in an 8-round mill, while the same distance is scheduled between Bing Conley of Lewiston and Art Weigand, the rugged welterweight from Buffalo.

Matchmaker Freeman will arrange a four-round bout to usher in this fighting card.

Coast Athletes Have Title Hopes

New York, April 26.—The Los Angeles Athletic Club has decided to defend its A. A. U. National Gymnastic Championship title, and plans to send a strong team, headed by Paul Kremple, national champion on rings, to the American Athletic Union title meet at Philadelphia on June 26.

This information was received yesterday by Chairman Roy E. Moore, of the Amateur Athletic Union Gymnastic committee in a letter from Kremple.

David Sharpe, national tumbling champion, will also be a member of the Los Angeles Athletic Club team, Chairman Moore also stated yesterday that the German gymnasts who are coming to this country to participate in the National Turnfest in Louisville, June 15 to 20, will also compete in the American Athletic Union championships at Philadelphia.

HAKOAH WINS FIRST SOCCER GAME, 4-0

New York, April 26 (I.N.S.).—The future of international soccer in America appeared bright today following the warm reception given the Hakoah soccer team of Vienna here yesterday in the opening game of their American tour. A crowd of 28,000 saw the Hakoah eleven, the first team of Jewish athletes to compete as Jews in the country, defeat an all-star team from the New York Football Association by a score of 4 to 0.

When Gans Betand Won

RUFE TURNER of Stockton, Calif., was knocked out by Joe Gans in the fifteenth round at Oakland, Calif., on the night of July 21, 1902.

You don't hear much of Rufe Turner, but that doesn't mean that he wasn't a great fighter. He was, however, as all Westerners will tell you. Rufe was a colored boy and brother of Charley Turner, one of California's greatest middleweights.

Rufe fought prelims in San Francisco until he got to be quite a card and then when per a topnotcher could be corraled Rufe usually took him on and [illegible] it.

Many an Australian star who stopped off at Frisco expecting to pick up a sucker met Rufe and then went home.

Eddie Cain of Brooklyn kissed the canvas the night he met Rufe. While Lewis went West with Elbows McFadden years ago and stopped off at Stockton for a bit of change and met Rufe. Willie went out like a light in two rounds.

That was Rufe Turner, who met Joe Gans, the "Old Master."

In those days the mutuels were within the law out West and you could set on a decision round you wanted, and if you were lucky you split up all the dough that was bet wrong. When Turner and Gans were matched for fifteen rounds the Stockton sports came down to Oakland well heeled and bet their rolls that Rufe would cop within six rounds. There was a chance. No one of his weight could hit ANY HARDER, and even though he was fighting Gans there WAS A CHANCE.

THE Gans admirers figured that Joe would win, of course, and doped it out between the sixth and tenth rounds. They figured that Joe would look Rufe over for five or six rounds, plaster him for three or four, and then dump him over about the tenth.

However, the Turner backers, who had engaged Spider Kelly, the greatest second that ever lived, felt that they had an ace in the hole and bet their dough willingly.

What none of the spectators knew, however, was that both Gans and his manager bet their chunk on Joe to win in the fifteenth. Hardly a soul dreamed that the fight would go fifteen rounds.

At any rate, it was one of the most interesting fights to watch. Gans, the master, boxed nicely with Turner for six or seven rounds, watching like a cat to uncover for that dynamite right, and learning round by round just how Rufe fought.

Beginning in the eighth Gans had his man measured to a "T." He knew just how much Rufe was to take and got down to work.

Leaning on [illegible] at the [illegible], the writer recalls that just about 20 seconds from the bell at the close of each round Al Herford would call out from Gans's corner, "Nice work, Joe," and suddenly Mr. Turner would be sprawling on the floor listening to the song sparrows.

Rufe never did really know just where he was from the eighth round on to the finish, for Gans had him pretty most of the time and on the floor unconscious some of the time. At the close of each round Gans dropped him. Just as the referee got to seven or eight in the count the bell clanged and Spider Kelly dragged the befuddled little darky to his corner.

WITH cold water and smelling salts Kelly would bring his man around, and in a sad and weary voice Turner would inquire "What round it was?" Kelly, patting him on the back, would lift him from his chair at the bell and say: "Rufe, you had him pretty most of the time and on the floor unconscious some of the time. Get up right out now"—and poor Rufe would.

Round after round Turner inquired where he stood, and round after round the hopeful Kelly told him.

Gans, playing cat and mouse with Turner, put up a masterful exhibition. Of course, he had his man exactly where he wanted him, but he had to be a master to do that with Turner.

As the fifteenth and last round started Kelly, feeling that Rufe might stick the limit and win a lot of money for those who bet that way, gave him an extra slug on the back as he sent him forth at the bell. Rufe just did get to the centre of the ring when a right-hander crashed against his chin and he didn't move from his old place on the floor until the count was over.

Gans won in the fifteenth with a K. O. The mutuels paid off on that round.

Few were down on that round but Gans and Herford. The clean-up was a pip.

CHILL BREEZES BAR BRAVE PASTIME

By NICK FLATLEY.

The chill eastern breezes that swept the Wigwam caused Brave officials to call off the opening practice with the Brooklyn Dodgers today. The Boston athletes had a long practice session, instead of a game, as Manager Bancroft isn't going to permit any vacationing until his team hits its stride.

Now that the troublesome Phillies are out of the way, the Braves should get down to normal baseball playing, and begin to crawl up in the National League scramble. The Phillies take on Uncle Wilbert Robinson's Dodgers on the first part of the week, and entertain the New York Giants after that.

Nick Flatley

The Robins, as at present constituted, look like a branch division of the Brave club. Rabbit Maranville, Mickey O'Neil, Jess Barnes, Gus Felix and Bill Marriott have all played in these parts, and are now doing regular work for Robby. It will be quite a reunion, without any great friendship attached.

These Robins, who used to be Braves, will want to show the native club up, naturally. The Braves, who formerly were Bedgers, will have the same thing in mind.

It is certain that the Tribe is due to snap out of it. Breaking even with the Phils in four games was not such a bad performance, but the fadeup was the most inexcusable since Boston has seen baseball, these many tough years.

The Braves were expected to have balance and confidence in this campaign, and they certainly have, but against Art Fletcher's bunch? The Phils that has been walking two years was right on the job. dangerous as ever.

One of New England's best mills takes their odd yarn and converts it into a fabric outside of their regular line. Made up in conservative colors, they are suitings that I can thoroughly recommend, both for wear and shape, and I want all Mitchell's old customers to get in on this purchase.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL BEST TRAINER OF MIND AND BODY

Grid Expert Brands Professors' Charges As Ridiculous

By HERB TREAT.

The overemphasis of college football again appears in the headlines. This time the shouting comes from the American Association of University Professors, which group, in order to have it be known to the public that it had just had a week-end in New York, decided that the great American games as played in the colleges today tends to cause dishonesty, immorality and excess drinking.

Rather a broad statement from a crowd of supposedly intelligent men.

The absurdity of the recommendations offered by the professors illustrates well enough the ridiculousness of their statement.

We advocates of college football never have claimed that the game was a means of solving the dry law. True, there is excess drinking, but isn't the same true at house parties, proms and night clubs?

Herb Treat

This is something for the dry to put a stop to—football cannot and will not take the blame.

The profs also decided that the undergraduates were dishonest and their work neglected because of football. Football, as all other intercollegiate sport competition, does more to stimulate honesty and cleanliness and too resite a spirit which makes men of boys than any single course taught by any association of professors.

Football is probably the most thoroughly taught course of any in the universities. I challenge anyone to dispute this fact, no professor ever taught a course that so effectively trained the undergraduate mind and body

GRID LEADERS DEFEND GAME AND TAKE FLING AT DETRACTORS

Football coaches and others identified with the great college game interviewed by representatives of the Boston Evening American today were almost a unit in defending the game against the attack of the American Association of University Professors. Here are some of the opinions:

Major Fred W. Moore, graduate manager Harvard Athletic Association: "Some colleges are overdoing football. I doubt if criticism given by the American Association of University Professors is a at at Harvard. We in Cambridge comply with the rules and regulations governing the sport, while the undergraduate body and alumni always have turned out at the games mere as a measure of encouragement."

Douglas Lawson, head coach of Williams College: "I'm afraid the faculties are taking a crack at football because it seems to be the thing to do, and I question if they have applied mature thought and consideration of the future to the subject. A professor recently told me that he had learned more watching football practice than from any other one source. The evil, I think, lies in the fact that coaches and faculties are not in close enough touch with each other; each could learn from the classroom and the football field. It leads to cleanness and teamwork, and men who have played and coached the game have failed to observe the "immoral effects" denounced by the Association of Professors. The influence which is carried into after life is usually one for good, clean, strong living. The professors see only the Saturday afternoon melee, and do not follow the daily work of the players. I don't think that suggestions offered will ever be taken seriously, and I feel that the rise of professional football will do much toward relieving the college situation."

Huntington "Tuck" Hardwick, former Harvard football star: "Ridiculous were the statements made by the American Association of University Professors." Never make a friend make a foe is probably their motto.

Accusing a college football participant of being a drunkard and dishonest is the applesauce. It is unfair in every way shape of manner to indecollegiate football. But cackling of that sort which is open to public criticism means nothing at all. It warrants a good panning.

I don't know of a single instance where a football player ever was dishonest. The same goes for the drinking topic.

Gist of Football Attack

INTERCOLLEGIATE football as it is now conducted is condemned by the American Association of University Professors on these charges:

It is conducive to drinking and dishonesty.

It leads to a distortion of values which continues throughout life.

It causes neglect of college work.

It creates over-excitement leading to hysteria, and culminating in "the madness of a yelling mob."

It relegates the curriculum to a position of minor interest.

The association recommends purifying the game by either limiting participation to one year, or by adopting the four-game system advocated at the Wesleyan parley. Also by choosing coaches of "character and personal influence which makes for cleanliness of living and speech."

COLLEGE PROFS SAY GRID GAME IS DANGEROUS

New York, April 26 (I.N.S.)—Intercollegiate football faced a new attack today from university intellectual forces following its condemnation from the American Association of University Professors in a committee report in the April bulletin of the association.

Yanks-Athletics Off

New York, April 26 (I.N.S.)—The game between the New York Yankees and Philadelphia Athletics scheduled for this afternoon at the Yankee Stadium, was called off on account of cold weather.

Dissension Menaces Athletics' Hopes

By DAVIS J. WALSH,
International News Service Sport Editor

New York, April 26.—From sources close to the outfit, it was learned today that all is far from well within the ranks of the Philadelphia Athletics and that the possibility of a show down is imminent.

Kid Gleason, hired to put vim, vigor and vanilla into the ball club in the capacity of overseer, has not found conditions altogether harmonious and is said to have incurred the displeasure of Connie Mack.

Those who have followed the team declare that its head is down, which may be taking a lot for granted, at that. Some carping critics seem to feel that speaking of heads in connection with the Athletics is like discussing orchids with a fishmonger.

BEST BETS LAST.

The Athletics were one of two clubs that caught the popular fancy of the pre-season handicappers. The other was the Pittsburgh Pirates, and it may be worthy of mention that both are in last place in their respective leagues today. The Pirates simply aren't hitting, but they will. However, the Athletics' problem is not so simple of solution.

The writer does not know from personal observation that Kid Gleason was absent from Shibe Park during several games of the important series with the Senators, but this was common gossip around Philadelphia. There was no official statement made in connection with the incident and the assumption was that Gleason had found his new position not altogether admirable. The Kid is rather quick on the trigger.

DUMB PLAYS CROP OUT.

The Athletics, on the other hand, earned the reputation of being a bit muscular around the ears last year and some of their performances this season have been enough to prompt Connie and the Kid to a dual dive into an empty bathtub. One of the recent Washington games serves as an excellent example.

Twice Galloway and Bishop failed to cover second base during the pas-

For the first time in years there is no extra waiting list at Wellington. It is now possible to be [illegible] in a club without having to wait for years or months and many golfers will take advantage of this condition.

STEVENS LAUDS OAR WIELDERS

The material for this year's Harvard varsity crew is considered by Coach Edward Stevens, former Cornell oarsman, the best of any during the three years he has been in charge at Harvard. Harvard has three eight-oared crews rowing with varsity colors, and in the first the competition is unusually keen, with two strokes and two seven men of nearly equal ability.

"I like the material we have to work with this year very much," Coach Stevens said, "it is by far more potential than that of any season I have been on the job. The competition is keen and we expect some very smooth rowing crews, as well as powerful representatives. The work to make up for the late start will soon be concluded and then we will know just about what we've got."

BUDGET DRIVES AWAY WRINKLES

Boston Evening American Offers Aid to Housewives in Planning Expenditures of Income

THE BUYING-A-HOME BUDGET
BUDGET TALK No. 35
By MARTHA LEE

"I am buying a home through the co-operative bank," writes a Weymouth reader. "If I had kept a budget long ago, I believe the house would be fully paid for by this time. We are busily budgeting now, however, and I'm losing a wrinkle a day. But just where do I take out the money for fire insurance, and what paints the barn this Spring?"

Cheerio, friend. Your shelter allotment is going to take care of both of these items for you and it's 20 per cent. of the total family income.

Here's the difference between the Rent-a-Home budget and the Buying-a-Home for Owning-a-Home.

Under Shelter (which is allowed 20 per cent. of the family income) comes rent and insurance and what-cha'-call-'em in the Rent-a-Home Budget. In the Buying-a-Home Budget shelter covers the interest on the mortgage, taxes on the house, fire insurance on the house, and all repairs on the house, and it also includes business and school carfares. The water tax will come out of Operating, also fire and burglar insurance on the furniture and household possessions. The actual payments to decrease the mortgage must come out of Savings. Maybe you are thinking—what do I care which heading it comes under, since it has got to be paid anyway?" Perhaps with these payments on the mortgage and all you are paying just as much as you would have for rent, but while your money would be going out just the name if you were renting, a goodly portion of it would be going into your landlord's savings account rather than your own.

And there's no question but what owning your own home, however tiny, develops the real home feeling, develops civic pride and interest, and gives the child growing up "in our own home" different memories, associations, habits and development from those of the child whose parents move frequently from house to house. It is usually conceded that the "home-grown" child makes the best citizen.

The wise home owner will religiously set aside 20 per cent. of his total income for the shelter fund, depositing the money in a separate bank account so that he will not be apt to be borrowed for other purposes. This makes a sinking fund from which to pay taxes, insurance and interest when due, and will enable him to make repairs when needed. The surplus—and there should be quite a sizable one, can be applied to the savings allotment if this is not sufficiently large to take care of the payments against the mortgage or if there is one or may be accumulated to enlarge or improve the house later or to use for investment.

Budget is the pilot to guide the family on the financial sea.

Write or Print Very Plainly

Don't make the mistake of "biting off more than you can chew" in purchasing the home, however. Twenty per cent. of your income is ample for the shelter fund. If you exceed it, you will have to pare off needed money from your food and other allotments that may endanger the family health and efficiency. It's far better to have neighbors judge you by the amount you live in the matter of culture and the neighborhood you and your family than by a sum dollar and cents.

A very wise woman, an authority on budgeting, writes: Unless an income is large income is to be expected almost immediately, a family is not justified in investing more than twice its annual income in the purchase or building of a house. Ask yourself if you are demanding luxury in shelter from an income only large enough to warrant comfort, or comfort when the size of the income indicates only safe living standards. If the cost of the shelter provided is too high for the income, other standards must suffer, and you will be in the position of a shop keeper who paces all his stock in the window, leaving nothing to sell from the shelves.

And now to try to solve some of the budget problems of my good friends (and I hope that each of you will remember that I am glad to have you write me fully and freely, and in strictest confidence, about your own particular budget problems. Every one will receive a personal reply, unless the inquiry is answered in this space).

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mrs. J. H. K. asks for a budget for a monthly wage of $110, which includes free house rent, fuel, telephone, electricity and use of auto. (Lucky Mrs. J. H. K.) She also receives $15 a week for board for the family, but only three to provide clothes for. Pays $3.50 for insurance, the rest for food, clothes, etc. Also asks personal budget for daughter, who has $17 a week, out of which she pays $15 for board, $80 weekly for insurance, and $14.16 a month for R. R. ticket. This is an income of practically $40 a week, with no shelter or operating expenses except laundry. Try $18 weekly for food for six, clothing for three $7, laundry $2 (?), savings $7, and personal $6. Insurance comes out of savings.

Daughter's budget will line up on a standard basis: $3.60 for shelter, $4.25 for food including lunches in town, $1.70 savings on living insurance, $2.55 for operating, including stationery, postage, toilet articles, and service (such as manicures, etc.), $2.55 for clothing and $2.55 for personal, including recreation, vacation, gifts, church dues, magazines, candy and all little luxuries. Leaving $5 a week for board and $3.25 a week for her commutation ticket (which comes under the head of shelter since it is made necessary by the location of the home) brings her food and shelter allotments $8 over the standard figures, and the plus 60 cents would cover the young lady's insurance.

Mrs. M. F. J. wishes help in budgeting $22 a week and $40 on the 15th and 30th of each month. No rent, 6 in family. Has to borrow each week to make both ends meet. This gives her practically $20 to work with. No insurance. Last $14 for clothing $5, operating (heat and light) $3.50, savings $2.50 and personal $3. With careful managing I believe you could pare down on this food allowance. Send 2-cent stamp to address if you would like me to send you economical recipe books and budget forms.

Dear Discouraged Mother—I wish you could know how truly I sympathize with you. Your situation is indeed a hard one, but we are more fortunate to count our blessings and be grateful. If you care to send full address, I would like to write to you personally. No income is too small to budget.

Mrs. J. W. L. R. is having difficulty saving on a $60 a week income with a bonus (amount not given) once a month. Pays $25 rent (unheated), $10 for operating (moving weekly; paying $40 a month on new car, $6 a bill of $132 and have never saved a cent in five years of married life. Without the amount of the bonus, the best I can do is to budget the $60 for you thusly: $10 shelter, including husband's car fares; food, $15, including husband's lunches down town; $8 clothing; $9 operating (fuel, light, telephone and gas); savings $4, personal, including the payments on the car and all expenses connected with running it, $12. The payments on the back bill can come out of the bonus, should have given you a higher allotment for savings, but for the present the car is your heaviest drain. Perhaps you can pare off a bit on operating or clothing, since the savings allotment must also include any personal insurance. Spending money except for car fares and lunches must come out of the personal allotment.

A lady from Carlisle street, Cambridge, who doesn't give even initials, is having trouble meeting her rent bills. Has to borrow for it each month. Family consists of husband, self and baby.

Income, $30 a week. Pays $5 on furniture, $1.50 Christmas Club, $1.25 insurance, milk $2.10, husband's lunches and cigarettes $4, and movies 75 cents a week.

On rent week pays no bills at all, and is never caught up on Christmas Club. Rent is $22 a month, $8 or $6 a month for gas.

"I figure my fixed expenses at $21 a week—that leaves $9. What can I feed my family on that amount?"

If you will send me your full name and address, I will gladly send you a book containing economical recipes which will help solve the food problem. It can be done on $9. The figures for a standard $30 budget are: Savings, $3, including Christmas Club and insurance; shelter, $4, including husband's business carfares; food, $15, including husband's lunches down town; $3 clothing; $3.50 operating, $1.50 and personal, including payment on back bills, furniture, etc., $4.50. You can easily fit these items to your individual problem. The only answer is for you is today to invest in six brown manila envelopes and each week put money in the various headings and seal them up there to the end of the week. Then rent day will hold no terrors for you.

I don't share these ideas, and invariably say that I know it to be false, but the feeling is there, and at present no reason is listened to. I hope that my opinions and my actions will not be quoted in opposition to my Government, for THAT beloved Papa (the late Prince Consort Albert) never permitted and took no part in advance the Government are perfectly impartial and only anxious to come to a settlement when can done for a, be accepted on both sides and honorably.

But their [illegible] to show [illegible] to accept of the views [illegible] have Lord Russell [illegible] temporarily. I can assure you nothing [illegible] and he does could have acted from the [illegible] things might have been different. As it is, the great object now is not to feel sore about comparatively small questions, for we God Almighty knows what may happen.

If I have been able to preach moderation and impartiality, and if I condemn excessive violence and ill, in the end, my efforts should be successful. I shall not grudge the suffering and anxiety I have borne if I can do good through it. But my task must not be made impossible by too great demands on the side of [illegible] and by separating me ostensibly from my Government. That would paralyze every effort for good on my part.

The Making of a Husband

By Ann Lisle

"I BELIEVE you would have told me if you'd known about Ralph going at once. But I don't trust me enough—or think straight enough to tell me the more fair and he ought to decide what is right to do. The decision was made for me, I abide by it."

"But you'll never forgive me," Jim said. "If he dies, and you remember that I was the indirect means of keeping you from saying good-bye to him, you'll never forgive me."

"He won't die," I said. "He'll fight back. He's tired. He's going to get a rest. Aunt May Hoadley will baby him. Uncle Max will amuse him and bully him—and Betty will care for him—"

"By Jingo! I believe you're a little jealous," Jim said with one of the rapid recoveries of which his boyish nature is so easily capable. "Betty may make him love her. She's a darn good-looking woman, and Lucy is fond of her. Romantic surroundings, illness, loveliness may do the rest. How would you feel then, Anne?"

I stared at Jim's smiling, triumphant, relieved face and thought for a moment. Then I said quietly:

"I don't know how I'd feel, Jim."

For that moment it seemed to me that perhaps Pat is right. It may be that Jim gets a certain enjoyment out of being jealous. It may be that he cherishes me the more because he is a little afraid of my loving for other men. Is this so? Must I keep Jim's love alive by making him afraid to lose me?

Is love worth holding at such a price?

Few days after I got the news of Ralph Lacy's breakdown and sailing for Europe I lived in a state of great rest and turmoil. Instead of reviving my problem with Jim, I had projected myself into the middle of a new unrest. For it seemed as if Pat were right—as if Jim resents Ralph and yet cherishes me the more because he is miserable with fear that I may really feel some attraction for Ralph, and may be more loyal than loving where my husband is concerned.

Nor were my own feelings for Ralph clarified by his sudden and definite going.

I could have sent Ralph Lacy a radio message, but I didn't. I felt that he had gone without a word because he preferred to keep a dignified silence between us. Long ago Ralph went out of my life because he felt it was too hard to stay like Lot on the outer edges. Now sick [illegible] has swept him away—across the ocean.

He had chosen to go without telling me of his illness. I cannot know whether he kept silence because he could not bear my pity, because he did not want to worry me, or because he wished to keep his mind free of thoughts of me. But whatever the motive for Ralph's silence, I could not ignore it. I could not follow him with a message that might reach my room—at the cost of his peace of mind.

I could not intrude on Ralph. Nor could I keep him out of my thoughts. Is he sick unto death? Is he weary—or loneliness?

These thoughts haunted me, and my peace of mind was not increased by the pressure of my other problem. Pat and Jeanie suggested that the way to keep Jim interested in me is to make him aware of the fact that other men are interested. I kept asking myself over and over whether I must keep Jim's love alive by making him afraid to lose me—and I could not decide whether or not love is worth holding at this price.

Never since our marriage have I been so puzzled and so agitated.

And then, to make bad matters worse, I found myself facing something far from admirable in my own nature. It was possible that Ralph might learn to care for Betty. That Betty would at once baby him and mother him and coax him to face life courageously and simply. I knew. That Aunt May and Uncle Max Hoadley adore Ralph. I know, too.

They took Betty away at a critical time in her life—when her adventures with the unscrupulous Swami left her emotionally and spiritually bereft. What more natural than for darling little Aunt May to play match-maker? What more natural than for lonely Ralph and lonely Betty to comfort each other?

But I couldn't be sure that I was at all eager for the obvious to happen.

"Am I jealous?" I asked myself. "Am I a dog in the manger?"

I longed to say "No." I almost had to say "Yes."

Then a still uglier phase of my disinclination to have Ralph turn to Betty revealed itself to me. I knew how Jim would laugh and triumph and tease me if this occurred.

"He'd think I hadn't much charm if a man could so easily forget me." I found myself thinking peculiarly. "He'd lose all respect for me if he thought I could not even hold a—"

I cut myself short with a bitter and scornful:

"For shame! Anne Harrison, is anyone else could see what a pitiful thing you are, how they'd despise you! I despise you, too. You've sacrificed enough of your poor friend Ralph's life. You've never freed him completely and let him go. You've wanted him around. You've counted on him. You've been glad of his help. You've triumphed in the thought that at least all the while you amuse yourself with a series of—flirtations, you had one man's honest devotion. You—you cat!"

Advice to Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Do you believe there is any such things as so-called "platonic love?" I am twenty years old and am in love with a girl seventeen. We have been keeping what might be termed "steady company" for the past two years.

When we first met and started going out, she was very much in love with me. However, lately she seems to have cooled down considerably. When I asked for an explanation, she stated that while she still admires me a lot and would not give up my friendship for the world, nevertheless she has lost whatever infatuation she felt for me and likes me now only as a pal and friend. Is the flame, once dead, capable of being revived?

The way she expresses it is that she doesn't want to love any one person yet, as she feels she is too young. I agree with that and am very willing to wait if only the old flame can possibly come back.

PLATONIC.

PLATONIC LOVE is only another word for friendship. Your friend and you, yourself, are quite right in realizing that she is too young to be in love with anyone as yet or even to understand what love is.

I suggest that you drink of her hereafter as a friend. If you and she prove congenial friends with mutual taste, your friendship may later on deepen into love.

Yes—"Off-Color" Teeth Can Now Be Lightened

Gums Firmed to Healthy Coral Tint

Accept full 10-day tube of this new way that leading dental authorities urge. Your teeth are not naturally dull . . . simply clouded by a dingy film cost now easily cleared off

THERE is now a new way in tooth and gum care. A way that acts differently from ordinary pastes and antiseptics. A way that clears cloudy teeth to sparkling whiteness; that firms gums to a healthy coral tint to match them.

Modern dental science has made important new discoveries. It's been proved teeth are seldom naturally "off color." Simply clouded by a dingy film coat that old-time dentifrices did not successfully clear off.

Let us send you a full 10-day tube to try. By clearing away this film of that film coat, you may change your whole appearance.

What film is—and its teeth, lurking film discolors

Dental science now traces scores of tooth and gum troubles to a germ-laden film that forms on your teeth.

Run your tongue across your teeth and you will feel it—a slippery, viscous coating.

That film absorbs discolorations from food, smoking, etc. It makes teeth look "off color" and dingy.

That film clings to teeth, gets into crevices and stays. It lays your gums open to bacterial attack. Germs bred by the millions breed in it. And they, with tartar, are a chief cause of pyorrhea and decay.

Old ways won't clear it off

Ordinary dentifrices and cleansers won't fight film successfully. Fed for it now with your tongue. Note how your present cleansing method is failing in its duty.

Now, two new methods are being used. A dentifrice called Pepsodent—different in formula, action and effect from any other known.

Largely on dental advice, the world has turned to this method.

Clears film off. Firms the Gums

It accomplishes two important things at once. Removes that film, then firms the gums.

A few days' use will prove its power beyond all doubt.

Queen Victoria Writes of General Garibaldi

The Crown Princess of Prussia to Queen Victoria.

NEUES PALAIS, 26th May, 1864.

Furious as everyone is here about England, the King never misses an opportunity of saying how much he owes you, and how grateful he is to you for your endeavors to keep peace, which he feels certain would not have been preserved but for you.

One thing I own torments me much, it is the feeling of animosity between our two countries; it is so dangerous and projective of such harm! It is kept up too by such foolish trifles, which might be so well avoided. Prussia has gained unpopularity for itself since some time, on account of the King's illiberal Government, but the feeling against us now in England is most unjust!

Now dear Papa is no longer here I live in continual dread that the bonds which united our two countries for their mutual good are being so loosened that they may be in time quite severed!

Garibaldi's Arrival

Viscount Palmerston to Queen Victoria.

94 PICCADILLY, 4th April, 1864.—General Garibaldi landed yesterday at Southampton.

Good advice has been given and will continue to be given him to avoid getting into the hands of men who would only make him a stepping-stone to get themselves into momentary notoriety, and the simplicity of his character renders him somewhat open to such attempts. His health is said to be improved, and his wound is said to be healed, though his ankle is stiff and he walks with difficulty.

Queen Victoria to Earl Russell.

WINDSOR CASTLE, 15th April, 1864.—The Queen much regrets the extravagant excitement respecting Garibaldi, which shows little dignity and discrimination in the nation, and is not very flattering to others who are similarly received.

The Queen fears that the Government may find Garibaldi's views and convictions no little cause of inconvenience with foreign Governments hereafter, and trusts they will be cautious in what they do for him in their official capacity. Brave and honest though he is, he has ever been a revolutionist leader.

Earl Russell to Queen Victoria.

FOREIGN OFFICE, 18th April, 1864.—Lord Russell has seen General Garibaldi this morning. Lord Russell impressed upon him that the policy of England was pacific and that this country would see with regret any attempt on the part of Italy to light up a European war.

General Garibaldi said that Lord Palmerston had spoken to him in the same sense; that he had no wish to begin a struggle in Italy or anywhere else; that he was a man of peace. But that he could not help thinking that the Emperor Napoleon, who represented military force, and destruction of all freedom, would finally be at war with England, which represented liberty and justice. That in that case his arm, and that of his friends, would be at the service of England to serve anywhere. That he admired England beyond all the countries in the world.

I thanked him for his friendly sentiments, but said that the English Government hoped the peace would be preserved. He is very frank, and open in countenance and manners.

"Feeling Ungovernable"

Queen Victoria to (her daughter) the Crown Princess of Prussia.

BALMORAL, 31st May, 1864.—I am grieved and distressed to say that the feeling against Prussia has become most violent in England, and quite ungovernable, as I heard from everyone. The people are carried away by imaginary fancies, and by the belief that Prussia wants to do anything but for herself, and that she has (and this we can't get entirely contradicted) broken through the stipulations of the armistice, by her exactions in Jutland

I don't share these ideas, and invariably say that I know it to be false, but the feeling is there, and at present no reason is listened to. I hope that my opinions and my actions will not be quoted in opposition to my Government, for THAT beloved Papa (the late Prince Consort Albert) never permitted and took no part in advance the Government are perfectly impartial and only anxious to come to a settlement when can done for a, be accepted on both sides and honorably.

If I have been able to preach moderation and impartiality, and if I condemn excessive violence and ill, in the end, my efforts should be successful. Giving the Boys a Fine Party

By L. Lamar Matthews

HOLT said, to start with, that he was not going to invite any girls to his party, because he wanted to have a good time.

"Just let us have some plain fun without any fixings," he begged. It was Holt's ninth birthday and as usual he was to have a party—but this was not going to be the usual kind of party.

"You may have any sort of party you wish," laughed his mother.

"Well, I'll just let us invite four; those I want and let me play what we like and eat as we please?" asked Holt operatively. When he was assured of this privilege, he rushed out immediately to break the glad news to his friends. "And don't dress up," he told each one.

So at two o'clock—or a few minutes—before on the following Saturday, ten little boys began an afternoon of unalloyed pleasure.

Nobody had to shake hands; no plain fun without any fixings." Besides that they had two helpings of ice cream and cake; and they sat around informally on the back porch, without any onlookers, while they enjoyed it.

body had to sit in a chair until a grown lady showed them what to do with it; nobody had to say nice words at the right time; nobody had to blow out candles or get tangled up in decorations.

Those boys simply "had some Little folks are keenly sensitive to criticism or to publicity. They may be laughing and talking while they enjoy their refreshments; then let older people enter the room and a blanket of silence settles down, over and around the youthful company.

CHAPTER LII.

AT first Sylvia thought that Ranny was talking to Mother Phelps. For he was saying something about putting up a bathroom shelf, and he often did little odd jobs like that for her.

"Yeah, I think a glass one would be best," Sylvia heard him say into the telephone, "I'll get one for you and put it up, tomorrow, if you like."

Then there was a pause. Then Ranney's voice again: "All right, I'll tell her. You know how much we enjoy having you. Goodnight, Babe."

Babe! So he was putting up bathroom shelves for her, now, was he? Sylvia found herself saying "Humph," like Aunt Agony, as she softly shut the door, and scurried back to her chair.

When Ranny came into the room half a minute later, she was sitting in her chair, looking as if she had never stirred while he was out of the room.

"That was Babe on the 'phone," he said, picking up his book. "Poor little kid, she's awfully lonely over there in that flat. She wants to come back here for the week-end, so I told her we'd be glad to have her. That was all right, wasn't it?

"No, it wasn't all right, Ranny," she said, raising her blue eyes to his. "All I've done for two weeks is cook and clean and pick up cigaret butts for Babs, and I'm dead tired. I don't have any time any more to look after the baby the way I should —You don't know how much of a job it is to entertain Babs—No, I won't have her here this week."

She looked at him, wistfully—Didn't he want to have a few days alone with her, for a change? Wasn't he weary of having a third person around the house all the time?

Babs Is Coming

"Well, I guess we'll have to have her this time," he answered carelessly. "I've told her to come, now. I said I'd drop around for her about 4, tomorrow afternoon."

Sylvia groaned—So she'd have to spend another evening alone with a book, while Ranny and Babs sat on the davenport busy with their works on architecture. Another evening of Babs' chatter.

"I'm going to call up Peter Wilk," she said, jumping up. "I'm going to ask him to take her to a movie tomorrow night. That'll get her out of the house for a few hours anyway."

Ranny laughed unpleasantly. "You told me a couple of weeks ago that you adored Babs," he reminded her. "You could hardly wait for her to get here, when she wrote that she was coming."

Sylvia went out into the hall and telephoned Peter.

"Well, what did your friend, the Purity Squad, have to say?" Ranny asked when she came back into the room. "After I kicked him out of the house the other night, I don't imagine he's so wild about coming here, again."

"He said he'd take her," Sylvia told him, "and then added mischievously, "Peter would do most anything for me."

Sometimes she thought it would be a good thing if Ranny did know how much Peter thought of her.

The next afternoon, Ranny drove into the yard with Babs.

She was not expecting them for an hour, and she was still wearing a house dress and a sweeping-cap. Her face and hands were dirty.

"Oh—!" she said to herself, "I mustn't let Ranny see me looking like this."

Why Does She Fail?

She heard Ranny open the garage doors, and drive the car into it.

"Did you bring one bag or two?" he asked, and Babs began to laugh.

"You ought to know! I brought only one. You put it in the car for me," she gurgled, "You're getting to be like me—I forgot everything when I'm with you. Do you know it."

There was no answer from Ranny, but Sylvia could imagine the way he was probably smiling at Babs with those blue-gray eyes of his. He never had been able to resist a woman who "made a play" for him.

Sylvia flew to her room.

She bathed and dressed herself as carefully as she had years ago, when she had been engaged to Ranny. There was a little trace of woman-daininess that she forgot.

She perfumed herself, and brushed her thick hair until it was like satin in all its deep, burnished waves. She was as pale as white coral with her excitement, and she needed no rouge for the red coral of her mouth.

"Why is it that I can't hold my own husband?" she wondered, for the hundredth time in her married life, as she looked at herself when she was ready to go downstairs.

There was no answer to her question.

None that she could find at any rate.

All around her, the house was proof of her good housekeeping. It was as neat as a pin, and it had that clean, bright, cheerful look that only a real wife and mother can give to a house.

The baby was warm and sweet as a rose, in her little crib.

The dinner was on the stove, and Sylvia had made the salad and the dessert that morning.

Everything was in beautiful order, even to the clean shirts and pressed ties in Ranny's chiffonier drawers, and the neat row of shoes in his clothes closet.

Sylvia Catches Them

"I know I'm a good wife," Sylvia found herself saying to her own lovely reflection in the glass of her toilet-table. "I know I am."

She knew that most people liked her, too. As Peter Wilk often said—"There's some sense to Sylvia. She can talk something besides baby-clatter." She could sing, too, only Ranny didn't like her to sing. He was jealous of her voice. He didn't want any wife of his to get a lot of public attention, so he said. A woman's place was in the house. Absolutely.

Sylvia found the living-room was in half-darkness.

In a corner stood Ranny and Babe Delano.

Her hands were on his arms, and her mouth was raised to his. Whether he had just kissed her, or whether he was going to, Sylvia never found out.

As she came into the room, Ranny saw her. His arms dropped from Babs' waist, and the two sprang apart. Babs sagged down into a little chair. Sylvia tried to laugh and failed.

She walked past Ranny, now, and faced the woman.

"Get up, Babs," she said, "put on your hat. I'll get it for you."

She ran up the stairs, and picked up Babs' wraps from the bed where she had slung them. Her bag stood on the floor. She carried that downstairs, too.

Ranny was waiting for her in the front hall.

"Sylvy, don't act like this," he said, and put out a hand to touch her. "You'll always be sorry, if you let Babs go like this."

But she drew herself away from him, and opened the door that led to the porch. There she dropped Babs' bag, and came back into the house leaving the door open

Ranny saw that she meant business.

He turned to Babs, who was silently putting on her coat and hat.

"Wait on the porch for me," he said to her. "I'll get the car—"

Sylvia Gets Out

But Sylvia stopped him. She put out her arm and barred his path.

"Wait" she cried. All her meekness and softness were gone now. Here was a woman—a primitive woman—fighting for her own. For her man.

"Listen"—she went on, and the man who faced her could see the flashing of her eyes in her white face. "If you walk out of that door with Babs Delano, I shall not be there when you come back!—I mean what I say."

He had been in a hand-to-hand battle with Babs, she could not have struggled harder to hold Ranny than she did now, as she stood there waiting for his answer.

Her heart cried out to him, but her face was grim and drawn.

And then—

Ranny took his hat down from the hall tree, and walked out of the dark hall. In the door, he paused and turned.

"No woman can tell me what to do, and what not to do!" he flung at her.

She was almost without feeling as she stood where he had left her. She saw Babs slip out of the house, and a minute later Ranny drove his car to the side steps of the porch.

Then the door of it slammed—and they were gone.

At eight o'clock when Peter, the faithful Peter, arrived at the Little White House, to take Babs to the movies, Sylvia was all ready to leave the house.

Two suit-cases were packed and standing in the hall. Beside them stood a case that held Sylvia the Second's nursing bottles

The little maid told him that Sylvia would be downstairs in a minute, and in less time than that, she came down carrying the baby in her arms.

She dimpled at him, but he could see that she had been crying.

She laughed at the puzzled look in his face, but she made no explanation of any sort.

"You expected to take a beautiful siren to the movies, Peter," was all she said, "And instead of that you're going to drive me and the baby and those two suit-cases to Aunt Agony's house. Do you mind?"

Aunt Agony's jaw dropped, when she opened the door of the Fleet street house, and saw Sylvia standing there with Peter Wilk.

"Well, mercy me! mercy me!" she exclaimed, throwing up her hands What's happened now!—You've left that good-for-nic again, haven't you?"

Sylvia's voice broke a little.

"No," she said, "I haven't left him. I'm just giving him time to think things over."

And so, after all, Peter the Faithful, found out what he wanted to know, that night.

THIS is modern speed! See the wertful thing that carries folks in a swoop from one place to another? What wahe brown horse and the shiny buggy to this? THIS is the way the young and the‹ cover the country now. The girl who lived in the small town anywhere in other daysaw the sights and the scenery in a circle for just as far as a bicycle or her beau's "y could take her on a Sunday afternoon. NOW she knows the country round her car to Florida, the sunny and lovely!

This car that this young man owns can make eighty! It has to go in second to get inside any speed limit in any town; even in first to satisfy the apparently antiquated notions of some of the more particularly drowsy ones, so he says.

Yet why did he insist on it being like a meteor thrown off a shooting star when he only needs an average of eleven miles an hour?—NELL BRINKLEY.

CORRECT MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

DEAR MRS. BEEKMAN:

I am going to give a luncheon for some ladies. We all belonged to the same club years ago. I would like to write them them each a friendly little note. What can I say?

R. C. C.

GOOD! I am so glad that you have decided to write your invitations. Instead of taking the easier (but not nearly so charming) way of inviting by telephone. I am always so proud of my readers who are willing to take this little extra trouble to give an especially pleasant and friendly send-off to the party. I think that it gives a lovely "glow" before the party. Don't you? Your note could be worded something like this.

"My dear Mrs. Dickinson—

"Will you come to luncheon at my home on Friday, the seventh of April, at one-thirty o'clock? I am asking all the group of friends who used to belong to the —— Club in 'those happy days.' I hope that my table will represent the unbroken circle of those dear friends —so you must come. I am sure that we can have a delightful time talking of old days and new. Do say 'yes,' for we shall all be looking for you!

"Dearest wishes to you and the heartiest of greetings and anticipations for our reunion on the seventh.

"Most devotedly yours,

"MARY SESSIONS."

Fashion Fads

POSSESSING New Illusions is usually every woman's ambition and one that can now be readily gratified at the linkerie counter. There sheer, chiffon-weight underthings, in pastel tones, are aptly and rightly named "illusion," for their fabric is as flimsy as "the stuff that dreams are made of." Vests, step-ins, panties, bloomers and nighties are either lace-trimmed, embroidered, or severely tailored, but all are of gossamer-like texture.

Symbols of Slavery rest none too gravely upon the wrist of the woman who slavishly follows the fashion for costume jewelry and endorses its vogue for slave bracelets. The latest version of such ornaments is composed of but three links, as large as shoe buckles, upon which a geometric motif, studded with cabochon stones, is effectively wrought.

The Temptress

By IBANEZ

Watson and Robledo had compromised with their surroundings by putting on dark suits.

Watson got up to go to his own quarters. Elena could not conceal her annoyance when he returned her look of cordial interest with a coolly courteous bow.

Pirovani seized his opportunity.

"I haven't dared say anything before, marquesa, but now I feel that I must. . . . This frame is unworthy of your beauty and elegance. . . ."

He gave a deprecative glance about at the room and its furnishings.

"If you like, my house is at your disposal from tomorrow on. It is yours, marquesa. I can live in the house of one of my employes."

Elena went through various gestures of protest, at the same time smiling at Pirovani and letting her glance rest caressingly on him.

Finally she promised to consult her husband about it.

In spite of the submissiveness with which Torre Blanca usually accepted his wife's suggestions, he indicated in no uncertain terms that this particular one scandalized him. Certainly he could not accept Pirovani's generosity!

"What will people think of his giving up his own house to us? Everyone knows that he takes such enjoyment in it!"

No; he shook his head emphatically.

But Elena became irritable.

"Your friend Robledo is constantly doing us favors, and yet it doesn't seem to occur to you that people might think that strange?"

"Of course I understand your scruples . . . but it isn't as though the house were being given to us . . . It is simply rented," said Elena, feeling on that point to Pirovani. You will go him when the irrigation project is fine to bring us in some money."

With a gesture of resignation Inmarques surrendered

The following day Elena called on Pirovani

The contractor, pale with emotion at being alone with her at last, received her at the head of the stairs and escorted her through the various rooms.

Finally they reached the bedroom that was to be Elena's henceforth

Spread out in every available space, were packages all carefully wrapped in tissue paper, tied with ribbon, and sealed. Pirovani was opening them eagerly, revealing dozens of flasks of perfumes and boxes of delicate and extravagant sweets, as well as handsome toilet articles, all the enormous order, in fact, brought from Buenos Aires.

Elena, passed from surprise to amazement; finally she burst out laughing, uttering exclamations of amusement not untinged with mockery.

Pirovani, quite white by this time, and growing bolder under the marquesa's smiles, tried to get possession of her hand. But Elena, with a malicious glance in her dark eyes, checkmated him at once

"I know that this is a real present," she said, "and that you are not like those vulgar men who sell their gifts . . . You want nothing from me but appreciation, I am sure!"

Then she extended her right hand graciously toward his lips.

"That is for you," she said

Variety of Food is the Spice of Life

Why Modern Feasts Surpass the Old

When Knighthood flowered and feasting was a royal pastime—bountiful though their fare, it would not be relished now for lack of variety.

Today the average family enjoys meals surpassing lavish banquets of old, both in variety and nutriment. Modern methods of growing, preserving, packing and facilities for shipping give variety to stimulate the most jaded appetite.

To make your meals interesting, though simple, select foods from the large variety offered by food advertisements in the Boston Advertiser and the Boston Evening American.

MEDBURY SAYS---

By John P. Medbury

EVERY man has two great problems during his married life. One is when he buys an automobile, and the other is when he starts teaching his wife to drive it.

NO matter how bright a woman may be, it's hard for her to use her head and feet at the same time.

ONE woman always looked in the mirror when she shifted gears because they were perspiring.

SHE said she wanted to see what she was doing.

THE only sure way to get a girl to put her hand out when she turns a corner is to buy her a diamond ring.

CHAUFFERING is hard to learn.

One woman took a motor lesson the other day and said she never knew a car had to be driven from the front to wool as she rear.

WHEN a girl wants to stop in a hurry she gets excited and steps on something, even if it's only the gas.

AND nine times out of ten she'll use a telephone pole for an emergency brake.

WHEN anything goes wrong they always have an excuse. One lady said she stripped the gears because they were perspiring.

SHE put ice in the vacuum tank to keep the motor cool.

BUT she was smart. She poured molasses on her shoes to keep her feet from slipping off the clutch.

SHE saved the batteries by filling the headlights with fireflies.

SHE also put lightning bugs in the tail-lamp.

THE first day she had the car she ran over two pedestrians to find out how the springs were.

BUT the jay-walkers were so bumpy she decided to have shock-absorbers put in the machine.

LEARNING to drive comes gradually. Ten dozen hardest things about an automobile are the twelve payments.

DAILY SHORT STORY

MADE-OVERS

By Louis Arthur Cunningham

CARMA had hoped for a new dress at Easter—a new, brand-new dress with the fresh smell of the stores clinging to it. It was to have been a dress in which she might walk proudly, a neat bliss affair. And she had a darling scarf to go with it and the cleverest coat. But the scarf had gone to help out her eldest daughter's new outfit. And the painfully scraped dollars out of Tom Breman's pitiful salary had gone to purchase that outfit. And Carma, sad-faced, sloe-eyed Carma, with a body lit for the crimine of queens, had to appear timorously, shamedly, bravely in a made-over dress.

It was not even one of her own dresses made over. That might not have been so bad. It was a cast-off garment of her sister Allie, who had married a man with an income that made Tom Breman's look like carfare. She had dresses plenty and to spare. Carma always fell heir to the old ones. And Carma did wonders with them. Her Easter dress, Allie's made-over, looked fresh and charming. Only a practiced or curious eye could guess at its history, but Carma wore it, always with the consciousness that another man's money had bought it for that other man's wife; that it was second-hand and that people knew it. Did it hurt Carma to have to take her sister's cast-offs? Would it hurt any woman, especially when she is lovely and good to look upon? It spoiled her days and made the sacrifice of denying herself to keep her daughters and sons well dressed more bitter to make than if she had worn rags. But one has to have clothes fit to take on in public. It was the only way she could get them.

Then Allie made no secret of the fact that Carma's pretty Easter dress was her old one altered and dyed. Allie was jealous because the dress, the same dress which she had bought at a high price in Gatesby's Gowns, a store of high prices and exclusive stock, had never looked on her one-half so adorable as it did on Carma. Carma had the skill of a fairy to make the drab colorful, the ugly graceful, the old new. But even the lovely effects she produced with Allie's worn-out gowns did not help the galling knowledge that she was wearing made-over clothes.

Easter Monday Allie had her and Tom to dinner. It was a big concession on Allie's part. Carma and Tom were not even within step of the social ladder on which Allie and her rich husband held a lofty rung.

Carma went with a little fear in her heart. Who would be there she did not know. Probably some of Allie's high-brow friends, some who would recognize that the gown she wore had been her sister's. And none of them was too highbrow to sneer at a woman who dared appear at dinner with them in made-overs.

Carma's fears were realized. Allie had set herself to humiliate Carma. She was envious of Carma's beauty and she did not like Tom Carma and Tom, in spite of their poverty, had riches of love that made poverty endurable. Allie, with all her money, was poor in love. Dollars while they may buy toy dogs and bon-bons could never purchase the children she did not have. Yes. She was hatefully jealous of Carma.

The dinner was an agony of unease for poor Carma. Who should be sitting opposite her but Gatesby—the Gatesby—of Gatesby's Gowns. An she was wearing one of Gatesby's gowns made over! Then several of the brainless, high-brow ladies looked her over and made the delicious discovery that the "wretchedly poor Breman woman had done wonders with Allie's old dress."

Carma felt it in the air. She caught sly, appraising glances. She heard titters and whisperings. Allie smiled too sweetly. Bravely Carma bore it all; but what disturbed her most, what she could not endure was the conduct of old Gatesby. He was frankly studying her. She flushed crimson and looked back defiantly. Had she not a right to do her best with his old dresses? She could never buy a new one for her very own. But she could do lots of things, clever little tricks to make his gowns suit her.

In defiance of all convention, some tactless female began to talk shop. Gowns were discussed with intimate freedom. And Carma grew more uncomfortable with the moments that passed. Gatesby was a blunt man. He felt that some of the witticisms and inuendos were meant for Carma. He had decided that Carma was a woman amongst women.

"I do not wish to create antagonism," he said in a voice that was certainly antagonistic, "but the most beautiful and tasteful gown among you all is on the fair lady who sits opposite me. I have enjoyed it as much as I have my food. It is exquisite. It is delicate. It is admirable, because it is perfectly adapted."

The gruff old fellow bowed to Carma as though he were honoring a queen. He had thrown a bomb into the party. And he knew it.

There was a silence, describable only as painful.

"Mr. Gatesby," said Carma, "you do me a disgraceful honor. But I thank you for it. The gown on which you compliment me is a made-over affair of my sister's. It is one of your own gowns. That is news to no one here."

Old Gatesby pounded the table in glee. "I knew it was one of mine, but it was fixed so no one in my place could fix it. You are a wonder. You made something of that dress. Forgive my roughness. But I see what I think. If I had someone like you, with your ability, in my store I would be happy."

The dinner, begun so wretchedly, ended in a triumph for Carma—triumph out of humiliation. But she did not enjoy it. Then, when it was done, old Gatesby waylaid her.

"If you will give me a few hours a day to do designing for me, you can name your own price. Your daughters are grown up. I have found that out. And believe me, there is no limit to what you can do. Will you try it?"

Carma tried it. Her genius rose to undreamed heights. Her gowns were marvels. Gatesby's prospered and she prospered with them. Never again did she go with fear to a dinner. It was the rest who feared. What woman of them knew but what the gown she wore was one that Carma had made over!

FOXY GRANDPA'S BEDTIME STORY

By Foxy Grandpa

WE were over in England and never in all my life have I seen Bunny spend so much time away from home. He apologized for it one evening, saying:

"Foxy Grandpa, I hope you will pardon my being out as much and I hope you will not think that I do not enjoy the society of you and Bobby. But, you see, in this country I am a foreigner and all of my English friends and relations are entertaining me. In fact, I am invited out nearly every day and I find the English cabbage very delicious."

"That's quite all right, Bunny," I laughed. "Go right ahead and enjoy yourself."

But Bobby missed his little playmate very much and one night he protested to me.

"Okay, Foxy Grandpa, he can't even sit on the porch with us! He's forever running out behind that dog-kennel and I never knew that Bunny was particularly fond of dogs. And this dog is a great big English mastiff and I should think he would scare Bunny to death."

"Oh, that dog is always tied up," I said, "and I've never seen him running loose. They always take him on a leash. I understand he hasn't a particularly good reputation in the neighborhood. Perhaps Bunny just goes out to chat with him and feels that he's quite safe.

"I've watched him, Foxy Grandpa," insisted Bobby. "He doesn't say a word to him. He whistles past him like lightning. I don't believe he even says 'hello' to that dog. I'm going to find out."

Bobby couldn't rest until he solved this mystery. So that evening after supper, when Bunny had excused himself and vanished in a flash toward the dog kennel, Bobby carelessly sauntered out in that direction himself.

In a little while he came back. His eyes were shining and he was chuckling to himself.

"He's got a pal out there, Foxy Grandpa. A great big fellow—very light brown, with black rips on his ears."

"One of his cousins, I presume," I laughed. "An English hare without a doubt."

"You ought to see their four ears sticking up. They are certainly having a serious conversation."

"Perhaps there is a Rabbits' World Court under discussion, Bobby. How do we know?"

"But why under the sun do they select such a dangerous place for their meeting?" puzzled Bobby. "Right there back of that big dog's house?"

"I'll ask him," I said, smiling.

Just as it was getting dark Bunny came in, hopped up on my lap and sighed. Then he spoke.

"Foxy Grandpa," said he, "it is a world known fact that my cousins, the English hares, are smarter than we are and much more clever at taking care of themselves. It's a fact, too, that they don't live in burrows as we do, but live in nests or forms right on the ground. But they show such wisdom in their selection of locations for homes!"

"In what way, Bunny?"

"Well," said he, "take for instance this big cousin of mine right on this very place. There he is back in his form right beside that dog's kennel. He knows that no fox or weasel or cat will come near the kennel, and he knows very well that that dog is chained up and can't get loose. He says his home is safe as the Bank of England, and that that must be a very safe place because people are always talking about it."

SMART SAYINGS OF CLEVER CHILDREN

The Boston Evening American will pay $1 for published smart sayings. Address "Smart Sayings," Boston Evening American.

A Scottish farmer, having been elected to the school board, visited the village school and tested the intelligence of the class by the question: "Now, boys, can any of you tell me what nothing is?"

After a moment's pause a smart boy in a back seat rose. "It's what ye gied me the other day for holding yer horse."

MEDITATIONS OF A WIFE

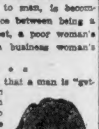
By Helen Rowland

MARRIAGE, to man, is becoming a choice between being a rich woman's pet, a poor woman's provider and a business woman's partner.

• • •

The first sign that a man is "getting along in years" is when he begins to brag about the little indiscretions that he used to be about.

• • •



Helen Rowland

No man ever ran away from a "dangerous" woman; the girl he runs from is the one that his mother picks out for him as "perfectly safe."

• • •

The first kiss always brings a lump in a man's throat—but it's the last kiss that leaves a lump in a woman's throat.

About the only time that a man begins to take any real spontaneous interest in the workings of a woman's heart is when he discovers some other man trying to "pick the lock."

• • •

Spring flirtations, like Spring colds, are so carelessly picked up, and so apt to lead to serious complications.

BOBBIE AND HIS PA

By William F. Kirk

WE had a lesson in rithmetik, it sed if a ant can crawl a foot in a minnit, how long wud it talk a ant to crawl up & down one of the Pear-amids.

That is a fierce question to ask a lot of children, sed Pa. The skools are getting Lo-ko, sed Pa.

You must not make Bobbie lose faith in his skool, dear, sed Ma.

But what a foolish question to ask a kid, sed Pa. How many kids know anything about the Pear-amids? sed Pa.

I guess a lot of grown-ups dont know much about them, sed Ma.

Well, sed Pa, if you mean me, I know about them plenty, sed Pa. I haf climbed every one of them, sed Pa, & been inside of them.

Wen, sed Ma.

The last time I was in Asia, sed Pa.

I thot the Pear-amids was in Afrika, sed Ma, in Egipt.

You thought, you thought, sed Pa. Do you reely sumtimes have thoughts on things, dear sed Pa.

I will bet rite now I am rite about the Pear-amids, sed Ma.

Forget the Pear-amids, sed Pa. Let us go to a movie picter.

No, sed Ma, do Bobbie's lesson for him. Tell him how long it wud talk a ant to crawl up & down one of the Pear-amids, sed Ma.

It wud depend on the ant, sed Pa. If it was a slow ant it wud talk quite a time, sed Pa, whe if it was a speed boy, such as yure husband onst was, sed Pa, it wuddent talk so long.

I think it is a perfectly silly problim, sed Ma. That is what I think about it. They are filling chilluns's heds with awful noncents nowadays, sed Ma.

That is the way with old folkes. thay think kids is all Dumm, it is a kind of dis-ease with old folkes, I guess. A kid cant outfox a old lady or a old geezer think that kids nowdays knows anything about nothing.

Talk it from me, kids knows moar than the old folkes thinks.

• • •

P. S. I know the answr to that questun, the answr is Well it wud depend on the size of the Pear-amid.

PRIVATE LIFE OF LADY TEAZLE

Lady Teazle's brother, Ingomar, who did so much for Kansas during the years of the great drought.

Editor's Note—Publication of the Teazle letter continues today, despite efforts of thousands of readers to obtain an injunction against same. Judge Meiselfus, in defying the writ, rightly ruled that the whole cannot be judged by a part, which, taken to itself, might be construed beyond the three-mile limit.

Let's see. Where were we? Oh, yes, Lady Teazle had revealed how she crossed the plains on a Riddle Kar to make a survey of sociological conditions in Flatbush. We pick up the thread of her romantic career from a postal card, quite well preserved, which was found many years later in the vest pocket of the postmaster of her home town in Kansas.

Open Arms Apts., Flatbush

Dear Mother—

You asked me to write and tell you if I had looked up Cousin Alph and his wife. They looked me up, mother, but I couldn't go to the door at the time, as I was studying my part in a new Shubert revue and really was in no condition to meet anyone. Please write and tell them I am struggling up the ladder of success, and, although I have slipped once or twice, I am determined to reach the top. Please ask Alf and his wife not to mind if I don't happen to recognize them on the street, as I am very busy.

WINNIE.

P. S.—I was sorry to learn father and brother had been indicted again. Mebbe it will give you a chance to get out more.

From the above letter it is apparent that Lady Teazle did not at this time consider the Schleswig and Holstein crisis as serious.

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaelis

THERE is a ceaseless conflict waged upon Earth's battle field, and watchers see how Evil's forces slowly, surely yield. They see how, ever, ago on ago, the foes of man retreat; they see how life, as hate departs, grows gentler and more sweet. As when the night is near its end and in the eastern sky above the shadows and the mists dawn's rosy banners fly, so now above Earth's ancient gloom, its terror and its blight, the promise of a better day lifts up its lovely light. And ever more of truth appears, of kindliness and good, till vanquished Evil draws away, with all his brutal brood. The promise of a better day is shining like the sun; it will be but a little while till victory is won.

SAVING WOODS FROM FLAMES IMPORTANT

By FRANK H. MELOON,
Financial Editor

Statistics recently printed in this column showed plainly the fact that exhaustion of New England woodlands has already driven the big lumber men to other sections of the country, notably the far Northwest. To save the remnants of New England from famous and most important, and Harris Reynolds, secretary of the Massachusetts Forestry Association, deserves special mention for his latest work in this direction. Mr. Reynolds offers a $200 cash prize for Boy Scouts of Needham, Dover and Wellesley, to be awarded for the best showing in detecting, fighting and preventing wood, brush and grass fires.

The writer has heard numerous stories of large profits made recently by transactions in timber in different parts of New England. One woman who bought a lot of than small trees in New Hampshire 20 years ago has averaged better than 15 per cent. on her investment through the sale of a part of her timber is as yet uncut. "Second growth" possibilities appear to be large, even when not fostered by up-to-date forestry methods.

While the national debt has been reduced approximately 4¼ billion dollars in the past six years, the debts of State and local governments increased by more than 6½ billion dollars.

Since more than three-fourths of all railroad taxes are levied by State and local governments, significance attaches to the following comparisons made for several important Class I railroads, between actual 1923 tax payments, and cash dividends paid, both expressed per share of common stock.

* * *

These figures were compiled by Jas. H. Oliphant & Co., of Cincinnati:

	1925 Taxes*	Present Dividend
Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe	$7.56	$7.00
Atlantic Coast Line	6.02	5.00
Baltimore & Ohio	6.63	5.00
Chicago & Northwestern	8.78	7.00
Illinois Central	6.02	6.00
Louisville & Nashville	6.61	7.00
New York Central	6.01	9.00
Norfolk & Western	5.18	8.00
Pennsylvania	4.73	3.00
Southern Pacific	5.71	6.00

*Including extras; $2.00 for Atlantic Coast Line and $1.00 for Norfolk & Western.

The year 1925 was the fifth year since 1919 in which railroad taxes exceeded railroad dividends by a substantial margin. The total taxes in 1925 were $363,262,000 and estimated cash dividends were $310,000,000.

It was recently stated in this column that, as of April 23, the trust department of the Old Colony Trust Company, its executor and trustee) was managing property with a value in excess of $130,400,000. This shows an increase of over $9,000,000 in slightly more than three months. The trust business handled by this company is $22,000,000 more than that of the next largest trust department of all the Boston banks. It is evident that people who create trusts recognize the advantage of a specialized trust service handled by a trained group of experts over the individual trustee, and are coming to look upon the large banking institutions as the logical conservators of property.

USE OF COPPER SETS PEAK

Increasing volume of American consumption is an outstanding feature in the copper situation. On the basis of March shipments domestic taking over a twelve-month period would reach the record total of 2,100,000,000 pounds per annum. This is equal to two-thirds of the total world consumption in 1925. It is not certain, of course, that this tremendous pace can be fully maintained. It is too much to expect.

Total deliveries of copper to domestic manufacturers for the six months ended March 31, 1926, amounted to 1,156,826,000 pounds, compared with 813,630,000 pounds for the previous six months.

American manufacture of brass and copper products has reached enormous proportions. This, together with the normal annual increase of the use of copper, gives reason to expect new volume records for 1926.

United States deliveries for the past six months were more than one-third larger than the total United States consumption for the year 1921. They were also larger than American consumption for 1922. Domestic consumers are not carrying heavy excess stock, hence deliveries may be taken as a pretty good gauge of the rate of consumption in this country.

Domestic shipments of copper in 1925 amounted to 1,667,343,000 pounds. It is apparent that the pace of consumption this year is running far ahead of 1925 figures. These factors should tend to develop some vitality in the whole copper situation.

FINANCE

By B. C. Forbes

The whole financial atmosphere suddenly has brightened.

The hope is now entertained that business sentiment and business activity will respond.

The signal for a sharp recovery in the stock market was the unforeseen reduction in the New York Federal Reserve Bank rate. Just as the increase in this pivotal institution's rate last January was accepted as a warning that stock speculation for the rise was going too far, the commission immediately reached when the rate was reduced last Thursday afternoon was that, in the opinion of highest banking authorities, speculation for the decline had been carried far enough. This same view is taken by nearly all banking and business leaders one meets. These leaders see no reason why the timidity which has been manifested in most lines of business should not give way to a greater degree of confidence and confident action.

Certain it is that the cry of "inflation" can no longer be raised. Brokers' loans since mid-February have been reduced $687,000,000. And the curtailment is still going on.

Call money rates closed the week at the lowest in more than a year and both time money and commercial paper have declined correspondingly.

The deflation suffered on the New York stock exchange between the end of February and the middle of this month was the most drastic ever witnessed within such a brief period. Latterly bear sellers were discovering that their raids did not frighten outside holders. Therefore covering of short commitments was becoming difficult.

Deflation in real estate has also been under way where inflation was recognized as having become most preposterous.

One first effect of cheaper money has been record-breaking buying of bonds. Transactions on the New York stock exchange on Friday were the largest in history. What is called the over-the-counter demand has been equally heavy. Government and other gilt edge bonds have in some instances sold at the highest levels ever touched. This is a natural reflection of the prevailing feeling that money will remain cheap for quite some time.

Consequently, if nothing untoward happens to business or agriculture, the superabundance of cheap money may easily foster renewed buying of speculative stocks.

Meanwhile, although the general price level of commodities has been downwards, as illustrated by 45 declines against only 20 advances reported last week by Dun's, almost all the latest business reports are encouraging. The sales and profits of leading automobile manufacturers are phenomenal. Consumption of steel is very heavy and the leaders in this basic industry are voicing unqualified optimism. The protracted cold weather is at last giving way and merchants are already reaping the benefit.

In the highest circles the tardy settlement of the Italian debt is cordially welcomed, and interest is now centered in the French negotiations. Should these prove fruitful, our bankers of international caliber will be greatly encouraged. It is difficult for the layman to grasp the importance they attach to the reduction in the New York official discount rate. All in all, they are distinctly cheerful over the whole outlook.

The prevailing view is that both the stock market and the business tide has turned for the better.

American Beet Sugar Company, which is one of the largest producers in this country of sugar from beets, owns about 32,000 acres of land, and leases nearly 14,000 acres in addition, in California, Colorado and Nebraska. Last year the company acquired and merged all properties of the Minnesota Sugar Company and the Northern Sugar Company. In addition to its land, the company owns eight factories.

Net profits during the past ten years have averaged about 9 per cent. annually on the common stock, although profits during the fiscal year, which ended in March, 1925, were equal to only $6.10 per share as compared with $8.11 per share during the previous fiscal year.

It was reported last September, however, that the company's financial condition was fair with current assets which exceeded current liabilities by nearly $3,000,000. Dividends on the old 6 per cent. stock were paid without interruption from 1899 until the new 7 per cent preferred stock was issued last year.

Payments on this new issue have been made regularly to date. On the common stock dividends were paid at various rates from 1911 to 1921 except the year 1913, 1914 and 1915. After a lapse of three years, common dividends were resumed in 1924 at the rate of $4 a share.

A Vast Improvement

Costing Taxpayers Nothing

The project of Boulder Dam, on the Colorado River, which means so much to millions of people in the West, and which, when completed, will offer a powerful object lesson to the East, is one step nearer realization.

By a vote of 13 to 2 the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation has authorized Senator Hiram Johnson to report it favorably and press for its immediate passage by the Senate.

The same considerations of public welfare which won this vote of approval in the Senate committee are operative in the House committee, from which similar action is to be expected.

One of these is the continually increasing flood menace, liable at any moment to become a disaster to Imperial Valley, located below sea level. The inundation of this fertile empire as the result of legislative delay in face of ample warning would be both a tragedy and a scandal.

Another is the necessity for assurance of an adequate domestic water supply in rapidly growing Los Angeles and near-by communities, a consideration vital to their continued prosperity.

There is also the unsatisfactory aspect of the present canal system, which supplies 60,000 Americans with water for domestic uses and irrigation after passing for sixty miles through Mexico. The proposed all-American canal which is part of the Boulder Dam development project would insure adequacy of flow without peril of diversion.

Then, too, is the great consideration of an acute demand for hydro-electric power, not only to serve rural and urban communities along the Pacific Coast but also to revive dormant mines in Nevada and Arizona. The proposed dam would permit a development of power unsurpassed at any other single station now in existence within the United States.

After an educational campaign spreading over five years the Swing-Johnson bill in its present form stands approved by President Coolidge, Secretary Hoover, Secretary Mellon, Secretary Work and governmental department heads whose duty it will be to handle the great project.

This $125,000,000 investment, which is to be self-financed without one cent of additional tax burden, provides for the highest dam in the world at Boulder Canyon, for an all-American canal to relieve American farmers from dependence upon Mexico and for a 1,000,000-horsepower electric plant.

Incidentally, the project will make use of the storage water to reclaim a portion of the public domain, now a desert, for war veterans instead of permitting that water to be used to create a vast empire in Mexico.

The project has merit and the cause of humanity should spur Congress to immediate action. The bill should become a law at this session.

Governor Fuller Is Right

District Attorney O'Brien Should Be Given the Help He Has Earned

Governor Fuller's special message to the Massachusetts Legislature leaves the opposition to the urgent and repeated requests of the District Attorney for Suffolk County for four additional assistants without a leg to stand on.

His attention had already been called to this question, the Governor says, by the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, by the Bar Association of the City of Boston, and repeatedly by District Attorney O'Brien himself.

For the last four years Mr. O'Brien has been appealing to Beacon Hill to give him an adequate staff with which to administer his office as he believes his clients, the people of Massachusetts, wish it to be administered.

Year after year he has reminded the Legislature that fifty-eight per cent. of all the criminal cases of the Commonwealth devolve upon the District Attorney for Suffolk County.

He has disposed of 34,000 cases since he entered office nearly four years ago.

He has only eight assistants with six sessions of the court in operation.

Furthermore, most of the large financial frauds occurring in the State find their way to Suffolk County for prosecution.

Attorney-General Benton reported to the Governor several months ago, as a result of a most careful inquiry, that any errors of judgment on the part of District Attorney O'Brien's office were for the most part due to the fact that his office is considerably undermanned. "The volume of business is so large," said Mr. Benton, "that it is physically impossible for the office, with its present staff, to give to each case the time necessary for its proper disposition."

In spite of this handicap, there stands today to the credit of Mr. O'Brien, as District Attorney for Suffolk County, a record of which he can well be proud—a record that reflects credit upon those Democrats and Republicans who nominated and elected him to his present office, a record for which Chief Justice Hall has repeatedly commended the District Attorney.

That the record is not even better is due in large part to the blind partisanship of those legislators on Beacon Hill who are animated by "the fury of party spirit," and are unwilling to respond to the reasonable requests of a conscientious District Attorney for additional assistants solely because the opposing legislators belong to one political party and Mr. O'Brien to another.

It is greatly to the credit of Governor Fuller, as this newspaper believes, that he has knocked the props from under the opposition to Mr. O'Brien's request.

The Governor's special message rings with sincerity and with truth. He does not mince words and he does not dodge facts. He calls upon the legislators to give District Attorney O'Brien the help he needs, and give it promptly and ungrudgingly.

"The need of making justice swift and sure," says the Governor, "is generally acknowledged, and to that end it is undesirable that a condition should longer be continued where the counsel for the criminal element has unlimited time to prepare his case, and where, in contradistinction, the District Attorney's assistant has, through necessity, very little time to work on the preparation of a case before its trial.

"A criminal finds it possible to summon to his aid able counsel, well prepared, who will attempt by every subterfuge to gain delay or acquittal. We should see to it that the public's case is adequately prepared and properly presented."

Speaking, as this newspaper believes, for the overwhelming majority of those of our readers who are citizens of Massachusetts, we appeal to the legislators on Beacon Hill to follow the leadership of Governor Fuller and give to District Attorney O'Brien four additional assistants without any further hickerjaw.

Love Is Built Up Upon Character

By DR. FRANK CRANE

WHOEVER put the words "Till death do us part" into the marriage ceremony understood life.

Whoever it was understood the difference between love and passion. Passion may be for a day, and usually is, and is often succeeded by indifference or contempt. Love is a different sort of thing.

Love is based upon other things than mere physical attraction. It is something composed of esteem, regard, and many other things that depend upon something else than proximity alone.

Human nature is so constituted that a man who swears to love a woman till death do them part is reasonably sure that if he behaves himself and controls himself love will be coterminous with his life. It is upon this law that the promise rests.

When passion has disappeared after a few weeks or months love remains. It is more than the residuum of passion. It is something built up upon character, and with reasonable culture it can be depended upon to endure.

In fact, love is one of the most enduring things in the world. It outlives hate. It is tough, and the more storms that blow upon it the stronger it grows.

This is noticeable in mother love which can endure and outlive the greatest disappointments. Long after a child has proved himself unworthy mother love will continue unabated.

Love does not depend altogether upon the actions of the other party, but it is inherent in the character of the person himself. Many a wife or husband keeps on loving in spite of all that is done to destroy that love.

If love were what many people understand it to be, a mere gust of passion or a wayward sentiment, there would be no sense in promising to cherish one another forever. Most of the objections to marriage are based upon the wrong conception of what makes marriage beautiful. It is not passion, but it is love.

Love often endures long after the fires of passion have expired.

Those who think that love is merely infatuation are apt to flit from flower to flower, while those who conceive of love as a child of loyalty will be stable and dependable.

Warns of Intrigue

By James A. Reed

United States Senator from Missouri.

THE thrusting of America by gag tactics into the World Court occurred January 27. What candid citizen does not regret that hasty and improvident action?

What citizen is there so warped by preconceived notions, as not to find in the recent developments at Geneva an absolute demonstration of the falsity of the claims hitherto advanced by the League of Nations and for the League's Court?

We were told that the league was to be an assembly of brothers, inspired by the spirits of love and charity.

What citizen now fails to understand that the League is an assembly of political representatives of the nations, every man of which is controlled by the interests, the ambitions, the hates and the fears of his own country?

Who is so dull as not to see that the spirit in that of the gaming table, where each participant plays a selfish hand, thinking only of the profit to accrue to his own country.

Who is there that does not now know that the great nations are playing the old game of balance of power and seeking to employ the league as an instrumentality through which they shall each realize its separate ambition?

Who does not perceive that behind the Locarno pact, heralded as proof of the triumph of amity and fairness, there were secret understandings tending to nullify the benefits it was pretended were to be conferred?

What American regrets that his country is not involved in such a web of intrigue? Who now is sorry that as this miserable exhibition of trickery, sham and shame has been played out, the United States has occupied a dignified and clean position?

LISTEN, WORLD!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

REMORSE—our favorite indoor sport!

I'm not saying that flippantly. I'm saying it with a deep knowledge of all the waste Remorse has caused in human life and a deep pity for those who continue to wreck their lives because they hope thereby to make atonement.

Such a one is "A Repentant Sinner." Read his letter once to get his story. Then read it again—to get your own, written there between the lines.

Dear Elsie:

May I write to you of myself? I am a young man. I have sinned grievously. I am attempting restitution. My wrong was not premeditated. It was more a weakness of will. God knows I am suffering now for that weakness. I have nightmares. My conscience will give me no peace. I am sorry. At times I think to end it all. But when I remember my mother—she is old—and how she expects wonders of men and has faith in me, I know I can go on; but oh, I need help, hence this letter.

Why You Regret

What can I do to atone? Is there forgiveness? How can I attain it? I would do anything in my power. I shall read your advice to me. I shall cut out the article and when I need help I shall read it. I do not wish to be dramatic, but you may save my life, my mother's. Miss Robinson, if you can advise me make it searing, scorching, powerful.

A REPENTANT SINNER.

You've sinned.

You're sorry.

All right—that's that. Why keep on chewing your nails? I'll tell you why.

First, because you think it's necessary. You are sincere in your belief that prolonged regret is the rightful sequel to sin. You've seen it done by all the best people. Large noisy sins have always been followed by handsome, noisy repentances in our best society. So, of course, you feel you should do yourself credit by the magnitude of yours. You feel that you're doing the right thing by both yourself and God in thus registering Remorse, night and day.

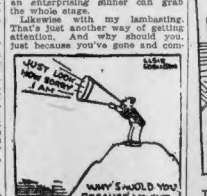
But there's another reason. You like to wallow in regret. It's a new and thrilling kind of Daily Dozen. It offers a peculiar satisfaction—it satisfies your sense of your own importance. It feeds your ego. It gives you a wonderful chance to concentrate on yourself.

It also gives you a wonderful chance to demand the attention of other people. Under the pretext of Repentance you can claim more attention and do more shouting than a dozen insurance men or real estate promoters. Law-abiding, respectable people seldom get an opportunity to hog the limelight, but an enterprising sinner can grab the whole stage.

Likewise with my lambasting. That's just another way of getting attention. And why should you, just because you've gone and committed a bit old sin, grab off all that publicity?



Good Alibi

Yes, as an alibi for egotists. Remorse leads the field. If you spent as much time looking in a mirror as you do picking at your soul, people would say you were a sissy. If you spent that much time eating they would say you were a pig. But you can spend that much time regretting and they're apt to say you are a saint. But you aren't a saint. You're just a self-centered individual with your eyes turned in.

It was bad enough for you to waste your time and energy, hinder and disrupt programs by your original sin. But it's even worse to continue to waste your time and energy by regretting it after you've come to your senses.

If you need to be sorry, be sorry. Give yourself the once over and call yourself the meanest names you know.

Then forget it and go out and get on the job again.

USE YOUR TIME TO GOOD ADVANTAGE

You have been confined to the house for a few weeks with an illness which it takes time to recover. That gives you time to reflect.

What do you do with that time?

Do you read good books and keep your mind cheerful?

A broken leg or a broken rib does not mean that you should neglect to use your mind.

You have wanted a little free time to get ready for next Summer.

You would not choose broken bones to enable you to have a few free days or weeks; but the fact that you are held up by a physical injury does not spoil your prospects for a good season.

Look over the seed catalogues—the wall-paper books—get suggestions about fixing up your home and surroundings.

Your outside daily grind has made you forget the fireside needs.

Plan a way to heat your house next Winter so as to avoid some of the annoyances of the past Winter.

This is the time to put your house in order and be ready to have things done properly. You are in a good position to consider your needs and those of the family from the fact that quiet has been enforced upon you at this time.

No Wonder Europe Laughs

This Is Lord Beaverbrook's Picture of US, in the U. S.

THIS IS HOW LORD BEAVERBROOK'S LONDON PAPER, THE "DAILY EXPRESS," PICTURES OUR UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES INVESTIGATING THE PURITY OF FOREIGNERS. WELL MAY THEY LAUGH.

Lord Beaverbrook has the right, like any other American, to laugh at, ridicule, and if possible correct American foolishness. He was born on this continent, went to England, made many millions, bought newspapers. But "once an American, always an American," and no matter how he tries he can't speak slowly enough or THINK slowly enough to seem genuinely British.

This picture Beaverbrook printed as a comment on our solemn authorities that told Lady Cathcart she couldn't come into the United States because she wasn't PURE enough. Some time in her past she had eloped, and of course this nation of bootlegging, easy divorce, many scandals and much crime, couldn't tolerate anything like THAT.

Under this picture Lord Beaverbrook prints the line "Is Zat So?" The dull-minded American official is saying: "You can't come in if you gotta 'past'—we gotta keep America pure!"

Poor Uncle Sam made himself ridiculous in that Cathcart case. You remember what the Bible says about worrying over a mote, a tiny speck, in your neighbor's eye, when you have a beam in your own eye.

The best joke for the whole of Europe came after Lady Cathcart actually got in, and was admitted to the pure and holy atmosphere of our glorious republic.

The very day she arrived, she was invited to a party on the stage to be given after the performance.

The lady, kept waiting at Ellis Island, because she wasn't pure enough, beheld at that party young gentlemen dipping champagne out of a bath tub, while a charming young lady of the chorus, wearing nothing but the hair on her head, took a bath in that same tub and in champagne.

Do you wonder that Lady Cathcart exclaimed, forgetting her own past: "Let me out, take me back to pure Britain."

We are not entirely bad of course, even if we do occasionally play the fool, yet we could be better than we are.

The gentleman that gave the bathtub-nude lady-wine party has been indicted, not so much on account of the wine party, as for committing perjury about it.

Lady Cathcart has gone back to England, and has probably told Lord Beaverbrook all about it by this time—if he knows her.

Very likely he doesn't, as the Lady has been more of a figure in South African society than in British society.
